THE CHRONICLES AND MEMORIALS OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND
DURING THE MIDDLE AGES.

PUBLISHED BY THE AUTHORITY OF HER MAJESTY'S TREASURY, UNDER THE DIRECTION OF THE MASTER OF THE ROLLS.

On the 26th of January 1857, the Master of the Rolls submitted to the Treasury a proposal for the publication of materials for the History of this Country from the Invasion of the Romans to the Reign of Henry VIII.

The Master of the Rolls suggested that these materials should be selected for publication under competent editors without reference to periodical or chronological arrangement, without mutilation or abridgment, preference being given, in the first instance, to such materials as were most scarce and valuable.

He proposed that each chronicle or historical document to be edited should be treated in the same way as if the editor were engaged on an Editio Princeps; and for this purpose the most correct text should be formed from an accurate collation of the best MSS.

To render the work more generally useful, the Master of the Rolls suggested that the editor should give an account of the MSS. employed by him, of their age and their peculiarities; that he should add to the work a brief account of the life and times of the author, and any remarks necessary to explain the chronology; but no other note or comment was to be allowed, except what might be necessary to establish the correctness of the text.

The works to be published in octavo, separately, as they were finished ; the whole responsibility of the task resting upon the editors, who were to be chosen by the Master of the Rolls with the sanction of the Treasury.

The Lords of Her Majesty's Treasury, after a careful consideration of the subject, expressed their opinion in a Treasury Minute, dated February 9, 1857, that the plan recommended by the Master of the Rolls "was well calculated for the accomplishment of this important national object, in an effectual and satisfactory manner, within a reasonable time, and provided proper attention be paid to economy, in making the detailed arrangements, without unnecessary expense."

They expressed their approbation of the proposal that each chronicle and historical document should be edited in such a manner as to represent with all possible correctness the text of each writer, derived from a collation of the best MSS., and that no notes should be added, except such as were illustrative of the various readings. They suggested, however, that the preface to each work should contain, in addition to the particulars proposed by the Master of the Rolls, a biographical account of the author, so far as authentic materials existed for that purpose, and an estimate of his historical credibility and value.

THE present Volume contains the concluding portion of the Fifth Book of the Eulogium Historiarum, commencing, to use the words of the author, with the "History of the Saxon Kings." The Genealogy of the Kings of England, the Monastic Chronology, and the Index of the author to his work are appended, followed by the Continuation down to A.D. 1413, which completes the present edition. The Manuscripts of the Fourth and Fifth Books having been already described in the Prefaces to the preceding Volumes, it remains only to give an account of the authorities followed in that portion of the work here printed.

The transition from the conclusion of the Historia of Geoffrey of Monmouth to the account of the Saxons is managed by an identification, overtly stated, of Ini the nephew of Cadwallader with Ina of Wessex, in cap. LXXIX. This Ini or Yne is stated to have been the son of Kenten, a person of British extraction, and of a mother of Saxon origin. The genealogy of Kenten (a name which appears to be a corruption of Centwine the king of Wessex third in order before Ina), is not given.

After a very brief recapitulation of the dates and other particulars of the deaths of S. Oswald and Oswine of Deira, and a mention of the victories of Offa of Mercia, the whole of which recalls the corresponding portion of the French Chronicle of Brut we come in cap. LXXX., to a brief account of the quarrel between Osberht of Northumbria and Buern Butsecarl, which is placed by our author in the reign of Offa. This story is found also in the Estoire des Engles of Geoffrey Gaimar, the Chronicle attributed to John of Brompton, and the French Brut. The account in the Eulogium, though more concise in detail, bears a closer resemblance to that in the latter work than to those in the two former.

It is probable that the succeeding portion of the Eulogium,¹ from cap. LXXXI. to cap. LXXXIV., both included, have been taken from the same source. In the latter part of cap. LXXXIV. there is a reference to the "Gesta Britonum," and both there and in the early part of cap. LXXXV., traces of the phraseology of William of Malmesbury show themselves. A long extract from his "Gesta Regum Anglorum," describing the presents sent by Hugh, Count of Paris, to Aethelstan in A.D. 926 is subsequently made, terminating with the account of the donations of that king to the Abbey of Malmesbury. There seems to be an original addition here in the shape of a notice of the exact spot in which the bodies of Aelwine and Aethelwine, the nephews of the king were buried: "ad caput feretri Sancti Aldelmi" (p. 13, l. 11 from bottom). These words do not occur among the various readings in the Edition of the Gesta Regum published by the English Historical Society, and may, therefore, be presumed not to exist in any MS. of that work. They are just such an addition as might have been made by an inmate of the Abbey of Malmesbury.

¹ The narrative is followed very closely, and in some portions of it the Latinized proper names are relinquished for those forms which are met with in the French Chronicle, as "Eldulph," "Eldred," "Alured," "Ellendoun" (p. 6), for "Ethelulfus," "Eldredus," "Aluredus," "Escendune."

Malmesbury is still followed with occasional interpolations from the Brut in caps. LXXXVI. and LXXXVII., and in cap. LXXXVIII. a direct quotation is given from his Gesta by name. The same work is the source of the greater part of caps. LXXXIX., XC. (where a direct reference for further information is made to the "Gesta Anglorum") and XCI.¹ The second account of the murder of Edmund Ironside in cap. XCII. is from some other source, perhaps the French Brut. The fabulous cause assigned for the change of feeling on the part of Cnut towards the sons of Eadmund is not in either. The account of the mission of Wigar, and the remainder of the chapter correspond to the narrative of the Brut. Malmesbury again supplies the greater part of cap. XCIII., the whole of caps. XCIV., and all of cap. XCV., except the date of the coronation of Harthacnut, which is inconsistent with the length of his reign there given; the mission to Aelfred and Edward, and the version of the murder of Aelfred, appear to be from the Brut. Malmesbury furnishes the materials of cap. XCVI., and, if we do not misinterpret the author's reference of his reader for fuller information to the "Gesta Anglorum," of cap. XCVII. also; at all events the very words of that work are used immediately after this direction, and followed to the end of the chapter. After a brief account of the birth, and early life of William the Conqueror in cap. XCVIII., the Gesta Regum is almost verbally transcribed, with the exception of a legendary account of the foundation of the Abbey of Battle in cap. CI., down to the end of cap. CIII. After this Malmesbury, still the sole authority, is not quite so closely followed, though the whole of cap. CV. is nearly a verbal transcript from the Historia Novella. In cap. CVIII. an account of the Castle of Malmesbury is found, which appears to be original, and in a short space gives the history of that foundation down to the petition of Walter Loryng, abbot of Malmesbury, in the 15th year of the reign of King John.

In cap. CX. the date of the coronation of King Stephen is given in the very words of Malmesbury, but for the portion of the narrative which intervenes between the words "et Sarum" (p. 65, l. 5), and "cum exercitu" (p. 66, l. 1), at which our author takes up the Annales of Nicholas Trivet, it is not certain what authority he has followed. From these last words, however, down to the words "dies xx." (p. 193, l. 12), the "Annales 'Sex Regum Angliæ,' have been largely used, and contribute the chief portion of the narrative. The very words of Trivet have been employed in the majority of the extracts, but occasionally the effect only of a passage is given. The selections are frequently made without regard to their arrangement in the Annales. There are occasional additions from other sources, chiefly the French Brut, or some authority common to that Chronicle and the Eulogium, and the Polichronicon; and in some few cases the source cannot be definitely ascertained. The text of the Annales having been already printed, it will be unnecessary to exhibit the minute differences between it and that of the Eulogium, except in important instances. The results of a collation of the two are given, so far as it is needed, in the foot note.¹ The edition of the Chronicle

reads "optimatum" for "primatum;" l. 19, for "episcopis III. . . . Normanniæ" has (p. 32) "archiepiscopis Hugone Rothomagensi cum tribus suffraganeis, Rogero Eboracensi cum cæteris episcopis Angliæ, ac Theodbrico comite of Trivet which has been employed, is that published by the Historical Society.

Flandrensi cum comitibus et proceribus Anglicani regni," the words "Mores vero . . . sequebatur," which follow in our text, are found in the Annales (p. 36, l. 8). In p. 69, l. 8 from bottom, "mœniæ" is "materiæ" in Trivet (p. 42, l. 5). The regnal years in pp. 69-71, from the 2nd to the 12th, both included, are one in advance of the corresponding numbers in Trivet. In p. 71, l. 2, "convinci" is "conjiçi" in Trivet (p. 54), and "Mariæ matris" (l. 9) is "Valeriæ martyris" in the Annales (p. 55, l. 9). In p. 76, last line, for "ecclesia suo destituerunt ornatu. Rogabant . ." Trivet (p. 95) reads "ne ecclesia suo destitueretur ornatu, rogabant . ." In p. 81, l. 14, for "die sequenti" Trivet (p. 115) has "Die vero tertia sequenti," which was a Sunday. In p. 91, l. 5 from bottom, for "debito modo" Trivet (p. 164) has "modo jure propinquitatis." In p. 94, l. 5, before "Petrum" Trivet (p. 179) reads "per." In p. 114, l. 11 from bottom, the words "in festo Beati Clementis Martyris" are applied by Trivet (p. 203) to the departure of Gualo; l. 6 from bottom, the words "qui et Turci" are not in Trivet. The regnal years in pp. 114-5, are each a unit in advance of those in the Annales. In p. 117, l. 2, for "suspendere" Trivet (p. 215) reads "dejicere;" l. 6 from bottom, the words "ministrante . . . archiepiscopo," l. 2 from bottom, the words "et . . . saluberrimum," are not in the Annales. (pp. 220-1.) In p. 118, l. 18, Trivet (p. 228) reads "Seysi" for "Beysi."

In p. 121, l. 12, the words "vel vivus vel mortuus ignoratur" are not in Trivet, who (p. 251) expressly says that Besilles was taken alive; l. 8 from bottom, the words "convitia eam maledicebat" are in Trivet (p. 251-2) "convicia . . . in eam . . . congessit." In p. 123, l. 8, after "Philippum" Trivet (p. 255) adds "Marmioun, Joannem de Vallibus, Rogerum de Leyborne, Henricum de Percy, Philippum." In p. 124, l. 9, after "Glouerniæ" a passage in Trivet (p. 256) is omitted, giving an account of the king's proceedings at Rochester and Tunbridge. In p. 127, l. 10 from bottom, for "tertiæ Johannes filius Johannis, Willielmus de Monte Camisii," Trivet (p. 259) reads "cum Johanne filio Johannis et Willielmo de Monte Camisii; tertiæ, in qua erant Londonienses, Nicolaus de Segrave." In p. 128, l. 13, "in crastino" is not in the Annales (p. 260). In p. 129, l. 2, after "audissent," Trivet (p. 261) adds "Londonienses," and in l. 3, after "abstulerunt," "Exinde . . . remanserunt;" in l. 6, for "regis" has "terræ fortiora." In p. 130, l. 16, for "marchio" Trivet (p. 264) has "Marchia;" in l. 18, after "societatem" adds "Joannes de Warennæ Surreyæ et Sussexiæ, . . . et Penbrochiæ applicantes," and in l. 19 for "adiens" has "regem secum ducens proficiscitur." In p. 131, l. 5, for "duo" Trivet (p. 264) has "dominorum Rogeri de Mortuo Mari, et Rogeri de Clifford;" in l. 7 from bottom after "tendebant"

The French Brut, or sources common to it and the Eulogium (for we have no longer in this portion of the Fifth Book the double forms of proper names noticed in the former part)¹ appears to have supplied the basis of the following notices:—In the reign of Henry II. the notice of the appointment of Thomas à Beket to the Chancellorship (p. 69, l. 1):²

Trivet (p. 265) adds "adjuncto sibi comite Gloverniæ, sero de Wigornia illuc tendens." In p. 132, l. 11, for "Evesham; veneruntque ex una parte. Ex duabus aliis..." Trivet (p. 266) has "Eveshamiæ ex parte una, veneruntque ex duabus aliis..." In p. 133, l. 13, after "regem" Trivet (p. 267) adds "juxta voluntatem suam plectendos jubet carceri mancipari," and l. 15, after "regem" has "steterant." In p. 134, last line but one, "redemptio" is omitted after "hæc." In p. 137, l. 6 from bottom, for "princeps infectus" Trivet (p. 280) has "præceps in factis." In p. 141, last line but one, for "sorores" Trivet (p. 292) reads "sororii." In p. 145, l. 18, "mali" is "clam" or "talem" in Trivet (p. 302), both inferior readings. In p. 146, l. 3 from bottom, for "Antonio" Trivet (p. 309) has "Antonius." In p. 147, l. 11, for "non matre" Trivet (p. 316) has "cum difficultate ad instantiam matris." In p. 148, l. 14, for "bonorum tempore . . . Eodem anno" Trivet (p. 316) has "bonorum. Tempore . . . cum." In p. 149, l. 5, for "regem" Trivet has "regis." In p. 152, l. 11, after "sibi" Trivet (p. 320) adds "tradi." In p. 163, l. 14, "et alium comitem" is omitted by Trivet (p. 351), who for "alium," in l. 15, reads "Alanum;" l. 18, after "Scociam," Trivet adds "interdicens." In p. 170, l. 3, for "concessa" Trivet (p. 376) reads "commissa," and in l. 6 from bottom, for "Londoniis" has "apud Eboracum." In p. 173, l. 4, after "Angliæ" a verb "pervenit" (Trivet, p. 380) is wanting; in l. 10 from bottom, for "muneris" Trivet (p. 381) has "numinis." In p. 174, l. 17, before "superioris" Trivet has "jure."

² The words of the Brut are: "En mesme cele temps (an. Dom. A. X.) Thomas Beket de Loundres Erche-deakne de Caunterbirs fust feat Chaunceler le Roy." Hoveden, Bosham, and Gervase of Tilbury agree with Trivet. Roger Wendover, however, supports the date in Trivet (p. 43) places this in A.D. 1157; the notices of the destruction of the castles erected in the previous reign, and of the resumption of the alienated vills, cities, &c., which Trivet (p. 36) places in 1 Hen. II.;¹ the notice of the cession of territory made by Malcolm, here called David, after what authority I am unable to say; this Trivet (p. 43) places in 2 Hen. II.,² and omits all mention of the "comitatum Lancastriæ;" the notice of the change of coinage, which Trivet omits, and of the birth of Geoffrey earl of Bretagne, whose dignity Trivet (p. 44) does not notice; the entries (p. 70) of the expedition against Toulouse, of which Trivet (pp. 46, 47) gives a long account and a different termination;³ of the death of Theobald archbishop of Canterbury and the destruction of Canterbury by fire, the former of which events Trivet (p. 50) dates precisely, omitting the latter; of the consecration of à Beket on S. Barnabas day (June 11),⁴ and the birth of the Princess Eleanor;⁵ of the translation of S. Edward Confessor, of the council of Northampton and flight of à Beket by night; in p. 71 the notices of the birth of the Princess Joan,⁵ of the death of the Empress Maud, of the birth of Prince John, of the marriage and issue of the Princess Matilda and our text; and in the Great Roll of the Pipe for 2 Henry II. (19 Dec. A.D. 1155—18 Dec. 1156), the name "Thomas Cancellarius" occurs.

² The Brut says "En mesme lan," i.e., the 4th, "le Roi Descocce rendi a luy quantqe il auoit en sa main, cest assauoir la cite de Caerleil, de Baumburgh, le nouel Chastel sur Tyne et le Counte de Launc." Diceto (531) has "comitatum Londonensem;" so also Paris (p. 96).

³ The Brut has: "Le vj^{me}. an il amesna graunt ost a Tholouse et la conquist." The last three words are omitted in MS. Cott. Dom. A. X. Wendover states that Toulouse was taken.

⁴ This date is wrong and should be Trinity Sunday (3 June), 8 Hen. II. Trivet (p. 52) gives the year correctly but omits the day. The mistake in our text may have arisen from the substitution of "iii. idus" for "iii. nonas."

⁵ Omitted by Trivet.

Henry the Lion,¹ of the death of Robert earl of Leicester, of his foundations² and the conquest of "Babylon";³ in p. 72, of the coronation of Prince Henry, and the marriage of the Princess Eleanor,⁴ of the rupture between the king and his sons⁵ and the death of Prince Henry (p. 73); and in p. 76 of the narrative of the events which led to the capture of Jerusalem by Saladin. In the reign of Richard I. we have apparently from this source the notice of the expedition to the Holy Land, in p. 81; of the surrender of Acre, the attack on Gisors by Philip Augustus and his defeat by Richard I.⁶ (which is transposed from its proper place after the return of the king from Germany) in p. 82;⁷ and of the interview with Bertram Gordon in p. 84. In the reign of king John the notice of the loss of Anjou and Normandy, the account of the election of Stephen Langton, absurdly placed in 1 John (the phrase in the Brut being "En mesme cele temps qe ceo,"—the imposition of a tenth on the clergy,—"fust") and of the commencement of the disputes between King John and the Holy See in p. 92, l. 13—p. 93, l. 7; the continuation of the account of the same disputes in p. 94, l. 9—p. 96, l. 16; omitting the mention of the grant of the castle of Malmesbury in p. 108, the whole of the narrative in p. 97, l. 4—p. 111, l. 9, where Trivet is taken up at the words

⁵ Trivet places the commencement of the rupture in 19 Hen. II. not in 16 Hen. II. The Brut says: "Et tost apres" the martyrdom of S. Thomas.

⁶ The account of the incident which gave rise to the enmity of the duke of Austria to Richard I. is not in the French Brut.

"Sepultusque est," appears¹ to have been enlarged from the French Brut or from some source common to it and the Eulogium, the public documents having been most probably supplied from a Latin authority. This is especially obvious in the story of the death of King John by poison, which, though containing many additions rendering it more dramatic, is obviously either founded on the Brut or taken from the same source as the account in that Chronicle.² In the reign of Henry III. there are few extracts from this Chronicle; they are the account of the council of Bristol in p. 113, 4; the notice of the Parliament in 2 Hen. III. (placed by the Brut in 4 Hen. III.) in p. 115, the sentence describing the capture of Fulk de Breaute in p. 116,³ the account of the coronation of Queen Eleanor and of the chil-

² The additions are chiefly found in the speeches put into the mouths of the actors in the scene. Thus (p. 109, l. 21) the words "cujus ponderis" are not in the Brut, nor of course the corresponding portion of the monk's reply. The "cum juramento" which follows is, however, exchanged for a more specific phrase in the Brut, "ha dieu" being the exclamation there put into the king's mouth. The remarks made by John on the cause of his annoyance, his inquiry (p. 110) why the monk looked at him so earnestly, and the resulting secret prayer of the monk (!), the application of the speech of Caiaphas to him, his remark after the usual "wassail," and the king's subsequent reflection upon it (p. 111), are all added either by our author or the original which he is here following. The monk's confession to his abbot is placed in the Brut before and not after the poisoning of the king's cup. By a remarkable mistake in the common original of B. and D. it is the poison of an owl ("bubo"), and not of a toad ("bufo"), which causes the death of the king in both those MSS.

dren of Henry III. in p. 119¹ down to the words "Natus est autem," where Trivet is taken up, the whole of p. 120² from the words "De Foresta," and the account of the surrender of Kenilworth castle and the flight of Symon de Montfort, jun., and the countess of Leicester in p. 135. In the reign of Edward I. there are but few extracts; perhaps the first paragraph of Cap. CXLIV. (p. 143); the whole of p. 158 and part of p. 159³ down to the word "gubernarent" (l. 5); the account of the treachery of Sir Thomas Turbervile (pp. 163, 164), of the oath of the Scottish nobles, which is placed after the siege of Berwick in the Brut, in pp. 164, 165, the whole of p. 166 down to the words "quoscumque invenit trucidat" (l. 7 from bottom) where Trivet is taken up; the notice of the death of Brian Jay in p. 169 (last line); the account of the siege of Stirling Castle, which is misdated by three years, and repeated under its proper date in p. 187; the notice of the capture of Wallace, in pp. 187, 188; and the notice of the death of Frisel, and the capture of John de Atheles in p. 190, 191.

Besides these additions to the narrative of Trivet, there are two interpolations from other sources of considerable extent in pp. 73-75, and pp. 86-89. The former, from the generally close coincidence of the phraseology and chronology with those of the chronicle ascribed to Thomas Wikes appears to have been taken from that work, with perhaps additions from the Flores Historiarum, the Annals of Waverley, and the same source as the Chronologia Augustinien-sis; the latter, which was added after a part of the reign of King John had been written (see note) is undoubtedly borrowed from the Polichronicon.

² Here "et immobilium" (l. 5) is an addition.

The sources of the brief account of Edward II. are not satisfactorily attainable. The verbal coincidence of a large part of it, with the shorter chronicle of Geoffrey le Baker of Swinbroke, completed according to that author, in A.D. 1347,¹ is obvious on the most cursory inspection, though there are a few entries in the Eulogium which are not found in that work. The most natural conclusion is that either our author transcribed this work, or that both followed some common source, the chronology of which may have been identical with that of Baker, that of the Eulogium, or different from both. An examination of the autograph A makes it evident that our author added particulars after the whole had been transcribed, and in more than one instance he has supplied a date, e.g., that of the escape of Roger Mortimer, jun., from the Tower of London, which is not to be found in Baker, but is given by Murimuth and others. There is a curious instance of carelessness in p. 196 in the double date assigned to the capture of the earl of Lancaster. The first is "in prima hebdomada" "quadragessimæ, die Lunæ," i.e., the Monday in the first week in Lent. Now, Easter day fell on 11th April in A.D. 1322, and therefore Shrove Tuesday on the 2nd March; the first Monday in Lent was consequently the 8th March. The second date, the correct one,

the unfortunate Edward II., he says that his authority was alive after the Great Pestilence, which did not terminate until the autumn of A.D. 1349. It is probable that "xxi." in the regnal year is a clerical error for "xxxI."

is "die Martis proxima post festum Sancti Gregorii" the 16th March. Our author has written this latter date in the margin of his autograph subsequently to the text, and omitted to erase the former. Baker gives no date. The list of executions which precedes this (pp. 196-7) agrees in arrangement with that in Baker, but differs from that given by him in the substitution of "Gloucestriam" (p. 197, l. 9) for "Kerdif," in the insertion of the names of William Hemyng (l. 10), Thomas de Berkley (l. 19), of the notice of the death of Maurice de Berkley (last lines) and of the passage "junior . . . Johannes Mauduyt" (p. 198, l. 3-6). The list in the French Chronicle of London (pp. 445) agrees with the Eulogium in most of its statements, but differs from it in omitting the names of the Mortimers, the Berkleys, and Robert de Howlond, and adding that of Hugh de Audeley, in the list of surrenders, in omitting the notice of the death of Maurice de Berkley, and of all names but those of Hugh de Audeley (junior) and Robert de Holond in the list of those who were captured and imprisoned, the number of knights being given at ninety-two instead of sixty-two. The names of Thomas Page, Bartholomew de Asshburnham, Stephen Barat, and Roger Damory are also found in the list in question, and various orthographical differences will be observed on comparing the two. Neither Baker nor the Chronicle of London gives the names of the judges of the earl of Lancaster, which have been inserted subsequently to the context in the autograph of the Eulogium (p. 196, l. 10-12). The accounts of the parliament in A.D. 1315, of the famine in A.D. 1319, and of the mortality in A.D. 1321 (to employ the chronology of the Eulogium) are from some source not at present ascertained. The dates of execution of the two Despensers (p. 198, ll. 2 and 5 from bottom) have been also added, after the transcription of the text of our author's autograph, from some other source; perhaps the French Chronicle of London. Neither Murimuth, De la Moor, nor Baker's shorter Chronicle give the dates of the days of execution. Higden gives only the former.

The chronology of this reign is very irregular in the Eulogium. It cannot be better described than by saying that the author has copied the words of Baker and the dates of Murimuth. We have the coronation of Edward II. placed: first, in the same year as the recal of Gaverston (p. 193, l. 5 from bottom), that is, according to our author (ib. l. 10 from bottom) in A.D. 1307; then (ib. l. 2 from bottom) in A.D. 1308; and again (p. 194, ll. 1 and 5) in A.D. 1309. The day is given: first, with Baker and Hemingburgh, as "vi. kal. Martii," or 25th February (p. 193, l. 4 from bottom), and again with Murimuth, as "vicesimo die mensis ejusdem" (p. 194, l. 4). These inconsistencies indicate the employment of more than one source; but it is not easy to devise a system of chronology which would bring an event happening on 28th January A.D. 1308 into the year A.D. 1309, and leave one which occurred on 6th August A.D. 1307 in A.D. 1307; something besides a plurality of sources is needed for the purpose; the, to an editor, unwelcome hypothesis of gross carelessness, or gross stupidity, will perhaps be found to explain the facts of the case. All the subsequent dates agree with those in the Chronicle of Murimuth (occasionally varying from those in Baker), except the dates of the arrest of the Templars in England in p. 194, and those of the parliament, the famine, and the mortality in p. 195. The former act is assigned by Baker to A.D. 1307. The writs to the sheriffs for the capture are dated 15th and 20th December,

1 Edward II. Our author seems to have adopted the phraseology of Baker and the date assigned by Murimuth to a subsequent part of the proceedings; the Council of London. The two latter dates are correct, for the famine and mortality commenced respectively in A.D. 1317 and 1319, and lasted three and two years. Different chronicles give different years, included between the limits of duration, for the epochs of both occurrences.

We now come to the reign of Edward III. The difficulty of satisfactorily assigning the sources of the earlier portion is insuperable, as there are many authorities for the period whose chronological order it is impossible to settle. The later portion displays remarkable occasional coincidences with the Continuator of Murimuth, that is, with the Polichronicon and its Continuation, but these are the more easily explicable, as this part of the Eulogium is the very one which supplies abundant evidence of original and contemporary composition.

Commencing with cap. CLXXIV., we find the first three entries almost verbally the same as the corresponding notices in Baker, our author with him assigning the third and not the *first*¹ of February as the coronation day of the king. There can be little doubt that this date is incorrect.

¹ This date agrees with that assigned by Murimuth (p. 52), Higden (Harl. 655), The French Chronicle of London (p. 58), and the Wardrobe Account of the Expenses of the Coronation preserved in the Record office, in the heading and body of the roll; in the former is the phrase, "circa coronationem . . . domini Regis . . . videlicet

"primo die Februarii . . ."; in the latter an item, "in apparatu et ornamento pulpituli Regis . . . die coronationis ipsius Regis . . . primo die Februarii anno regni sui "Primo," and another entry. Avesbury gives 25th January. Hemingburgh's MSS., according to Mr. Hamilton (p. 297, note 2) give 2nd February.

The account, under the year A.D. 1328, of the serious conflict at York, between the townspeople and the Hainaulters, may either refer to a well-known riot which took place in A.D. 1327, or to some other similar conflict. If to the former, it exhibits important differences from the corresponding narrative in the Chroniques of Froissart, for that author, besides assigning the origin of the riot to an entirely different cause, states that it first broke out on Trinity Sunday (11th May) A.D. 1327, instead of on a Tuesday in September in the following year.¹

It is most probable, however, that the date given by Froissart is correct, for in the particulars of account attached to an indenture in the Record Office, dated 2nd March 2 Edw. III., between Master John de Paris, clerk of Sir John de Hainault, and Robert de Wodehous, keeper of the king's wardrobe, is an item for expenses "pro . . . rebus medicinalibus et " aliis expensis factis circa quosdam de comitiva dicti " domini Johannis" [sc. de Hanonia] "vulneratos apud " Eborum die Sanctæ Trinitatis anno supradicto" [sc. primo] "et circa (?) sepulturas quorundam interfecto- " rum ibidem" A royal commission was issued on the 14th June 1 Edward III., to make inquisition concerning a riot at York between the Hainaulters and the men of Northampton, Lincoln, and York, and the letter of safe-conduct "ad partes " suas" for John of Hainault and his colleagues bears

Neither of them seems to have any notion of the source of Leland's quotation, and both assume that it relates to the same event as their texts. Drake, in his Eboracum, also uses the quotation, but applies it to a second riot in A.D. 1328.

date the 22nd August in the same year.¹ The conflict is mentioned by most of the chroniclers of the period, who almost universally place it earlier in the year than the siege of Stanhope Park, which occurred in August. One exception, however, (and there may be others) is found in the French Chronicle of London, which states (p. 60) that the riot took place when the king had returned to York after the siege, that is about the middle of August or later. The particularity of the account in our text, in which are specified not only the numbers killed, but the numbers killed on the spot, the numbers mortally wounded and dying on the third and fourth day, and the numbers drowned in the Ouse, with the names of the parish burned down, and of that in which the affray took place, seems to indicate that our author obtained his details from some contemporary local chronicle or witness; and if this were the case the improbability of error in the date which he has assigned to the event would of course be considerable. It is not impossible that the dislike of the English for their allies, exasperated by their own defeat in the riot which preceded the siege, might have broken out afresh after the return of the army to York, supposing that all the Hainaulters did not leave England at once with John of Hainault; and an entry in the above indenture for "consimilibus expensis suis et totius sequela sue veniendo ad partes Angliæ pro guerra Scociæ simul cum passagiis et custumis ad mare ab viij^o die Maij anno Domini nostri Regis supradicti primo usque viij. diem Septembris anno eodem," shows that all of them had not left England before the 8th September been doubtless very full, and the evidence of the highest value. According to the Brut, the inquisition was taken at York.

1 Edw. III. This fact of course destroys the possibility of an affray with the Hainaulters at York after the 8th September; but as the 1st was a Tuesday in A.D. 1327, it still remains open to doubt whether a second conflict might not have occurred on that day. If, however, we assume the year given in the Eulogium (A.D. 1328) to be correct, and not a mistake for A.D. 1327, or a mere numerical difference arising from a difference of epoch, we must suppose that some second conflict took place at York between the same combatants in September A.D. 1328. This might possibly have arisen in the following manner:—On 25th January A.D. 1328, Edward III. was married to Philippa of Hainault at York, who was accompanied thither by John of Hainault and a second retinue of Hainaulters. If these men remained at York until September, a second conflict might have taken place in that month with the results mentioned in our text. There is no evidence, however, in the Public Records¹ or elsewhere that this was the case, and I do not know of any chronicler but our author who has assigned the event to a date so late as September A.D. 1328. The difficulty must therefore remain unsolved; for it would be clearly rash to assume either that our author had misdated by sixteen months an event of which his account is remarkable for minuteness of detail, or that no second riot ever took place, because there is no notice of it discoverable elsewhere at present.

The date assigned to the birth of Edward the Black Prince (p. 200) agrees with that given by Murimuth (p. 64), but the two dates immediately following, that of the birth of the princess Isabella, and the battle of Gladsmuir, and that of the capture of Roger Mortimer, appear to have been interchanged. The account of the battle is brief, the locality agrees with that given by Higden, and the date is the same as his, but the list of the supporters of Edward Balliol is more complete than in the Polichronicon, or in Murimuth. The siege of Stanhope Park is placed most unaccountably in A.D. 1332. The phrase "eodem anno in æstate sequenti," combined with the assertion that the execution and capture of Mortimer took place after Michaelmas, seems to show that our author is here following a chronicler who commences his year with that feast, that is, probably, Murimuth; but particulars are given which are not mentioned by him: the peculiar effect of want of food on the Scots, and the contemporary report that they escaped by the treachery of Henry de Beaumont. The date "III. idus "Julii" of the commencement of the siege of Berwick agrees with that in the Polichronicon. The date of the battle of Halidon Hill agrees in all particulars with Murimuth (p. 70), but the account is not in his words. The surrender of Berwick is placed on the same day as the battle, the battle having been really fought on the vigil, and not on the feast, of S. Margaret Virgin, and the surrender having been made on the morning after. The date of the act of homage of Edward Balliol is placed one day in advance of the date given by Hemingburgh (p. 309), and, if the "circa festum Sancti Johannis" of Murimuth (p. 75) be assumed to mean 24th June, five days earlier than his date; the year is one in advance of both. The day of the death of Pope John XXII. is given as Advent Sunday, which fell on 27th November in A.D. 1334, and this, if the new year were commenced at Michaelmas, would convert the complete date into Advent A.D. 1335; the printed text of Murimuth (p. 77) gives 4th December A.D. 1334, agreeing with Geoffrey le Baker (p. 162). His successor is not named in our text, for what reason it is not easy to say. If our author were following Murimuth, or writing much after the date of the event, it is not easy to see why he left out Benedict XII., especially as he mentions his death at p. 206. The date of the parliament of February A.D. 1337 is also given in terms which necessitate the commencement of the year before 25th March, i. e., in 1st January, 25th December, or Michaelmas. The list of earls created agrees with that in Rymer, and in the chronicles of Hemingburgh (pp. 312-3), Murimuth (p. 81), Baker (p. 128), and Knighton (col. 2568), with the omission of Roger de Ufford, earl of Suffolk. Knighton, however, adds (col. 2569) Hugh de Courtenay, earl of Devonshire. The notice of the remarkable natural productions in this year is found also in (p. 200) of Walsingham's Historia (recently published in the present series), but considerably amplified. I am unable to say from what source it has been derived by our author, if it be not original.

¹ Among the Miscellaneous Writs formerly in the White Tower is a bundle of writs addressed to the sheriffs of different counties, ordering them to summon all persons

In cap. CLXXVI. we find the first of a series of extracts from the Continuation of Murimuth, or, more properly speaking, from the Polichronicon, with which and its Continuation the Continuation of Murimuth closely coincides. It appears to have been followed down to the words "collectis undique" (p. 203, l. 4), where it is relinquished, and a brief notice given of subsequent events down to the retirement of the French on Paris in A.D. 1339. The former portion of this notice is probably abbreviated from Murimuth (pp. 85, 86).¹ There appears to be, however, a slight

"injuste tenuerat" after "usurpaverat" (p. 203, l. 1); adds "Angliæ plures" after rex (l. 2), and substitutes "humiles" for "supplices" (l. 2), and "pecuniis" for "auxiliis cum militia copiosa" (l. 5). It omits the place of embarkation of Edward, and his stay at dislocation in the latter paragraph, for our author places the assumption of the French arms by Edward III. before his invasion of France in September A.D. 1339, Murimuth placing the same act subsequent to his return into Brabant (p. 92). The actual date of this assumption appears to be uncertain; the marginal date, 8th February, is the date of the patent addressed to the people of Flanders by the king, and noticed in our chronicle; this is not given nor noticed by Murimuth, but is to be found in Hemingburgh (pp. 336-40). This latter portion may possibly be original in the Eulogium. The account of the concessions of the parliament of 29th March A.D. 1340 is almost as full as that given by Hemingburgh (pp. 354-5), but there is no reason to suppose that our author used his chronicle; the numerous coincidences might very well arise from the peculiarity of the subject, which consists of an enumeration of aids and reliefs, necessitating the employment of the same or nearly the same technical words by any writer who fully detailed the particulars. We here observe that the author places 29th March A.D. 1340 in A.D. 1339, although in the very next entry, that of the death of Adam de la Hoke, abbot of Malmesbury, we have 25th March A.D. 1340 placed in A.D. 1340. The date of the parliament is repeated twice, and on the second occasion it is written on an erasure in the autograph, but the erased letters cannot now by any means be rendered visible.

Antwerp. The Polichronicon coincides so closely with the Continuator that its deviations are not worth notice. The year assigned by Murimuth himself agrees with that in the Eulogium, the day being one in advance of our author's (in spite of Mr. Hog's note, which would lead a careless reader to suppose that it was five days in advance). Murimuth has many particulars omitted in our text, e.g. the first interview between Edward and the Emperor, before the election of the latter.

The account of the naval engagement at Sluys, and the siege of Tournay in cap. CLXXVIII., approximates very closely to that in the Polichronicon and the Continuation of Murimuth (pp. 172-3). There are variations between the two accounts of slight importance, and an addition in the Eulogium giving the exact duration of the former conflict. The cause of the truce is, however, differently stated, Higden and the Continuator assigning it to the non-arrival of pecuniary supplies from England, and the Eulogium to the mediation of the Countess of Hainault and another cause "tactam," i.e., probably "touched upon" (by the authority he is employing). Higden is still followed in the new chapter, where, however, our author, instead of representing with him that the severe storm which attacked Edward on his return from Brittany was said to be due to the arts of the necromancers of the king of France (!), contents himself with recording the report as simply attributing it to necromancers and mischief-makers, without any more particular specification of their official position and authority. In cap. CLXXX. we have a notice of the death of pope Benedict XII., with a number of details of his previous preferments, not found in the Polichronicon, and a character of his successor, Clement VI., differing greatly from the more carefully weighed estimate of Higden. It certainly has the effect, brief as it is, of a panegyric rather than a criticism. It was most probably written before the death of its subject, for the length of his pontificate has been inserted in the autograph by the author long subsequently to the context.

The account of the campaign of Cressy in caps CLXXXI. and CLXXXII. commences in nearly the same words as the corresponding portion of the narrative of the Continuator of Murimuth, which here coincides verbally with the Poliericon.¹ After the word "ap"plicuit" (p. 207, l. 3), it is difficult to say what source our author has employed. The account was evidently left unfinished by him, a blank still remaining in the autograph (p. 209) for the letter of Philip to Edward. Ample materials exist for a full narrative of the campaign. The original letters, preserved by Robert of Avesbury, from Michael de Northburgh, and the Confessor of Edward III., the letter of the king himself printed by Mr. Coxe in his edition of the poem of the Black Prince by Chandos Herald,² in conjunction with the Itinerary compiled, with his usual accuracy, by the late Mr. Hunter from the Account of the Kitchen of Edward III., preserved among the Wardrobe Accounts in the Record Office (Archæologia, vol. xxxii., pp. 379-87), will serve as a standard of comparison, and we shall find many divergencies in our author's narrative which are worthy of notice.

burgh, who, however, omits to notice the destruction of the town and castle of Valognes, which is mentioned by Baker and Froissart ("si la prirent et robèrent toute, et puis l'ardirent"). Northburgh further says that only a part, "mult de la ville," of the town of Carentan was burnt, in spite of the efforts of the king to save it, while Froissart describes the siege of the castle and the total destruction of the castle and town. The account of the capture of Caen contains a particular omitted by Baker, Knighton, Northburgh, and Froissart; it is the title of Marshal of France applied to the Chamberlain of Tankerville; this is found in the letter from the king himself already referred to.¹ The notice of the assignment of the prisoners to the Earl of Huntingdon is mentioned by Knighton and Froissart, but not by Baker nor Northburgh.

The sequel of the capture of Caen is briefly told in our text; but it contains a tolerably full account of the negotiations between the king and the Papal legates at Lisieux,¹ which is not found in Froissart, but appears in a letter from the king's Confessor, preserved by Avesbury (p. 128). There is one slight difference between a statement in this letter and in our Chronicle; neither the spoliation of the legates, nor the restitution of their horses, is mentioned by the confessor. Baker briefly notices the negotiations, which are not mentioned by Knighton. The portion of the narrative which intervenes between the notices of the return of the cardinals and the arrival of the king at Poissy, is rather confused, and incapable of illustration from other sources. The brief notices of the death of Edward de Boys, and of the wounding of Richard Talbot and Thomas de Holond, are perhaps evidence of the employment of the accounts of eye-witnesses, such unimportant particulars not being likely to be found in general histories; the attack on the castle of Roche-Guyon may be referred to some similar source. Only a general notice of the reduction of castles and fortified places is given in the letter of the Confessor, while by Froissart it is particularly stated that the English abstained from destroying the fortresses, and assaulted neither walled town nor castle ("n'y assaillirent ville fermée ni châtel"), because the king wished to spare his men and his artillery. Baker says that the castle of Roche-Blanche, "quæ stat ultra Seganam," was burned two days before arriving at Poissy. For the portion of the campaign between the king's arrival at Poissy and the battle of Cressy, both included, we have again a letter from Northburgh, dated 4th September A.D. 1346, preserved by Avesbury. In this letter we find a brief notice of the attack on the English, engaged in repairing the bridge at Poissy, by a party including the men of Amiens, and their defeat by the Earl of Northampton, confirming partially our author's statement that a capture was made at the bridge of some waggons ("chariettos") coming from Amiens with provisions and tents, the guard accompanying them being defeated with great slaughter. Froissart takes no notice of this incident.¹ Baker describes it fully, and says that a body of men came from "France and "Amiens" to prevent the passage of the English. The letter of Philip de Valois to Edward, given by Hemingburgh and others, was evidently intended to have followed here by our author.

In cap. CLXXXII. our author agrees with Froissart, and apparently with Baker (or De la Moor), in asserting that the king destroyed the castle and town of Poix. Northburgh attributing the capture to the rear-guard. With respect to the exact position of the spot at which the English army crossed the Somme, called by Froissart the passage of Blanche-Tache (in the present day Blanque-Taque), our author appears to be in error, as he places it between the towns of Valéry-sur-Somme and La Crotoy. He agrees with the Continuator of William de Nangis and the author of the Chronique de Flandre, in asserting that the body of Frenchmen under Godemar du Fay took flight without offering any resistance, and with Northburgh in his notice of the great slaughter, notwithstanding this want of bravery. The account of the feat of one Colvyle, an Englishman, is, so far as I am aware, peculiar to our chronicle. The battle is briefly described; the list of killed and the other particulars being only slightly touched upon. The defeat of the French appears to be attributed, partly at least, to panic arising from a false idea of the overwhelming numerical superiority of the English force. The subsequent events, up to the siege of Calais, are very hastily passed over.

The brief account of the victory of Nevile's Cross (pp. 211-2), provides an additional proof¹ of the inaccuracy of Froissart's assertion that Queen Isabella was present there. No mention of her presence is made; an omission most unlikely to occur, if she had really been there, in a Chronicle so nearly contemporary with the victory. The construction of one of the passages is a very remarkable example of the carelessness of our Chronicler. The blunder which creates the confusion is of such a character as even to raise a slight suspicion that he was here copying that which he did not understand. I have, however, left the text uncorrected as the correction is easy. A comma after "triumphabant" (p. 212, l. 3), and a parenthesis including the words "sed Dei Eboraci archiepiscopatu" (ll. 2-6) will render the whole construable.

In cap. CLXXXIII. we again come upon a passage almost verbally coinciding with the Continuation of Murimuth (pp. 177-8.) The only variations of any importance are given in a foot-note.¹

The account of the First Great Pestilence in cap. CLXXXIV. differs in two important particulars from the corresponding notices of other contemporary writers. In the first place the date at which it is stated to have commenced is earlier by a whole year than that assigned by the majority of them. In the second the duration attributed to it in England exceeds the greatest of the durations given by any of them by more than a year.² No date being here

² Knighton (col. 2,598) the continuator of Murimuth (p. 178), Avesbury (p. 178), all agree in assigning A.D. 1348 as the year of its arrival in England. The first says that it commenced "in autumpno" and terminated at the same time in the following year; Avesbury is more precise, and says that it began in Dorset about the Feast of Saint Peter-ad-Vincula (1st Aug.), reached London about All-Saints'-Day (1st Nov.), ceased there about Pentecost (31st May, A.D. 1349), travelling northwards, where it died out about the ensuing Michaelmas. Baker (p. 190) says that it began at Bristol about the Assumption (15th Aug.) A.D. 1349, reached London about Michaelmas, and lasted more than a year in England.

The dates given by Sir Harris Nicolas (Chronology of History, 389) must be artificial, and not true, for that the plague had commenced in Westminster before A.D. 1349 is clear from the words of the royal writ dated 1st January, A.D. 1349, proroguing the Parliament summoned thither on the 19th January: "Quia . . . subita "plaga pestilentie mortalis in loco "prædicto" (sc. Westmonasterio) "et aliis partibus circumvicinis, adeo "indies invalescit quod de securo "accessu hominum ad locum illum "formidatur admodum hiis diebus." Fœdera, iii. 180.

In the spring of A.D. 1348 the plague had commenced in Florence, according to Boccacio (Decamerone. Prohemio.): "Dico adunque "che già erano gli anni della frut- "tifera incarnatione del figliuolo di "Dio al numero pervenuti di mille "trecento quarantotto quando nella "egregia città di Fiorenza . . . "pervenne la mortifera pestilenza . " . . . quasi nel principio della "primavera dell' anno predetto hor- "ribilmente cominciò i suor dolo- "rosi effetti."

assigned to the termination of this plague, we are left in uncertainty as to whether the word "Anglia" (p. 214, l. 12), was intended by our author to mean, as it commonly did, England only, or to include Scotland and Ireland, or was unintentionally substituted by him for Britain. In either of the latter cases, the duration given of more than two years, would fall short by a little of the true period instead of greatly exceeding it, and the date of commencement in the text might very well have been a slip of the pen for "MCCCXLVIII." In the former the duration given is probably erroneous, and the initial date more probably than in the other cases, a blunder and not a slip. The details of the course, severity, and effects of this terrible scourge, are confirmed for the most part by other writers; I do not find, however, in other accounts any notice of the sterility which is here said to have followed it. The list of the prices of grain and cattle may be compared with similar accounts in Knighton (col. 2599, 2600); the asserted scarcity of labourers actually produced a rise in wages which was the subject of a petition of the commonalty to the Parliament of 25 Edw. III. (Parl. Rolls, II. 227). The price of labour was artificially lowered by a statute of the same Parliament (ib. pp. 233-5). After a notice of the death of John Tyntern, abbot of Malmesbury, which is placed on the 8th Aug. A.D. 1350, but which appears by the escheator's account of the temporalities of the abbey, and other documents preserved in the Record Office, to have taken place on 8th Aug. A.D. 1349,¹ we come to the campaign of Poitiers, in reference to which our author has some curious and valuable information to give in the shape of an Itinerary of the progress of the Prince from the 4th Aug. to the 2nd Oct. A.D. 1356.

Another
MS. known, but not discoverable.

So far as I can ascertain, no other copy of this Itinerary exists in contemporary chronicles. Neither in Avesbury, Knighton, Baker, the Continuator of Muri-muth, Chandos Herald, nor among the valuable known fragments of contemporary correspondence on the cam-paign printed and unprinted, does any such document exist, neither are materials to be found out of which it might have been compiled. There is a MS. of the Itinerary itself still in existence, but I have hitherto failed to discover it.¹

But though no other copy of the Itinerary can be discovered at present, there are a few contemporary accounts of the movements of the Black Prince during the period which it includes, with which it can be com-pared, and which in the main confirm its dates and localities. These are the brief accounts in the letters of the Black Prince himself to the Mayor and Corpo-ration of London,² and to the bishop of Worcester,³ and the account in contemporary chronicles.

I am inclined to think that the original composer of the Itinerary or at least of its groundwork, must have accompanied the expedition.

One of the peculiarities about it which induces this belief is the omission of the exact names of persons and places, and their identification by means of cir-cumstances or attributes. Thus we have "duas magnas

"conia," "unum castrum de comitatu de Bloys, quod situm est super amnem de Cher," "juxta unum castrum forte," "aquam quæ tendit ad Poyters," "fuerunt capti comites duo, scilicet Danser et unus alius." These are just such descriptions as would be given by a person who had been at or near the localities, but had only been able to command imperfect information, or possessed insufficient leisure in the hurry of the march to obtain fuller particulars.

Other indications of originality are the frequent mention of personal feats and of the deaths and casualties occurring to unimportant persons, and even the very brevity of the account of the battle itself, both of which peculiarities are generally observable in the accounts of eye-witnesses personally engaged in a battle, and easily explicable by general causes.¹

It is probable, however, from the uniformity of the handwriting in the autograph of our Chronicle, that this journal was copied by our author from only one original source, and that this was a written and not an oral source is also likely from the fact that the few errors in the names of places which are found in it are errors arising from the confusion between letters of similar forms, and never between letters of similar sounds. Thus we have only (p. 218, l. 62) "Citerauf" for "Citeraus," (l. 8) "Cosini" for "Cosmi," (p. 221, l. 29) "Chanigny" for "Chauigny," (p. 222, l. 8) "Chaigne" for "Chauigny," and (p. 22) "Dausser" for "Dauser" (d'Auxerre). Such blunders as these could only have been made by a transcriber, and by a transcriber ignorant of the correct forms of the words; their existence, therefore, excludes the supposition that the writer was either here writing from dictation, or fair-copying his own rough notes (originally made from dictation) themselves, or at least that part of them in which these words occur. The uniformity of the handwriting in the autograph tends to prove that from whatever source he was compiling any one portion of the Itinerary, from that same source he compiled the whole of it.¹

If it were possible to find among the Accounts of the Wardrobe of the Household of the Black Prince a roll similar to that discovered by Mr. Hunter for the Cressy expedition, we should be able to verify the statements of the unknown compilers of this curious diary by the highest conceivable authority; but unhappily, in the Record Office at least, very few Household Accounts of the Black Prince are to be found, and those that are preserved belong to an earlier period than the year of the campaign of Poitiers. There is also in the same office a register of patents and charters commonly known as the "Black Prince's Book," and a volume of enrolments of documents relating to the Duchy of Cornwall; but the former contains only documents of the years A.D. 1346-8, and the latter, though extending over the Poitiers year, has very few instruments enrolled in it which are not dated "Londres." The narratives of contemporary chroniclers, as it has been already observed, are extremely scanty, even Froissart supplying but few data by which the statements of our Itinerary can be checked. Taking such evidence as we have,

¹ From the forms of the proper names it seems most probable that the original groundwork of the Itinerary was written in Norman French, as it would probably have been if it had been the account of a lay witness. We have "Brige-rake" and not "Bergeracum," "Peragor," "Bremptoun," "Roche-

"war," "Litherp," "Burboun," "Seynt Yman," "Isoldoun," "Gyen," "Virizon," "Mountba-son," "le Haye," "Croessee," "Chastel Heraud," "Vienne," "Poyters," "le Roche," &c. Twice we find "leucas" as a measure of distance, instead of the ordinary "miliaria."

however, we shall find that the statements in the Itinerary are in the main confirmed.

From the letter of the Prince to the Bishop of Worcester, we learn that he set out on the 6th July, A.D. 1356; during the siege of Breteuil, according to Froissart. The prince briefly describes his march as being towards the parts of Bourges in Berry, Orleans, and Tours; Froissart is more particular, however. He says that the prince crossed the Garonne (?the Dordogne) at Bergerac, then the Dordogne in entering Rovergne, that he then entered Auvergne, and crossed and recrossed the Allier several times; the next time he is mentioned we find him near Bourges in Berry. This gives a line of march obviously more circuitous than that in our Itinerary; probably the two accounts are not really inconsistent, but only describe different portions of the movement of the whole body, and are derived from different originals. In the letter of the Prince to the Mayor and Corporation of London, it appears that his route lay through Perigort and Limousin "tout droit vers Bourges en Were" (? Beri). After leaving Bourges, Froissart, so far as he goes, agrees with the Itinerary, the points of contact of the two taking place at the towns of Issoudon, Vierzon, and Romorentin. The spirited description of the siege of the latter place in the French author's Chronicle is replaced in the Eulogium by a much briefer account, which still contains particulars omitted in the other. The siege is said to have lasted four days by our author, Froissart apparently assigning only two days to the reduction of the castle. The letter of the Prince to the Corporation, however, assigns five days to the siege of Romorentin, thus confirming the superior accuracy of our Itinerary over the account of the French historian. Both our author and Froissart agree in noticing the deaths of La Brette and De Zedulach, Froissart only giving the name of the latter.

After the capture of the castle of Romorentin, Froissart says that the prince proceeded through Anjou and Touraine on his return towards Bordeaux, that the French king marched from Chartres, by La Haie, to Chavigny, which he reached on Thursday, 15th September, and left on the Friday following. The Itinerary, on the contrary, states that the prince when at Chastelleraud, which he reached on the 14th, and left on the 17th,¹ heard that the king had been at Chavigny on the Saturday preceding, that is, the 11th. Froissart continues that, after the king had crossed the Croesce (Vienne) at Chavigny on the 16th, the Counts d'Aucerre and de Joigny, and the Seigneur de Chastillon-sur-Marne, and others, stayed behind to avoid the confusion, and crossed on the next morning; and that the prince, who with his army had moved on the same morning from an adjoining village, sent couriers forward to gather news of the enemy; that these couriers fell in with the Count d'Aucerre and his companions, who pursued them up to the very banner of the prince, and, after a severe fight, were all taken prisoners or killed; and that the prince then heard that the king had passed through Chavigny before him, and saw that a battle was inevitable. Our Itinerary, as it has been stated, says that the prince heard at Chastelleraud that the French king had been at Chavigny, and adds that on Saturday, the 17th, after crossing the Vienne, his baggage having gone over on the night of the 16th, he heard that the main body of the French was marching towards Poitiers, and that a great multitude of them was crossing "ibi," that is, at Chavigny. That he then pushed on "ultra modum" after them, and that his couriers came upon the rear-guard of the French, and put them to flight, but forbore from pursuing them, lest the middle or van-guard should reinforce them. All this is fully confirmed by the account of the prince himself in the letter above quoted. He says that on hearing that the king was crossing the "Vivane," he decided to march rapidly towards him to force him to give battle; but that the French army had passed, except about 700 men, before his arrival. These were pursued to Chavigny, about five leagues off, by his own people. Our author adds that the Count Danser and another were taken in the skirmish. This agrees with Avesbury, who mentions the Counts d'Aunser and de Juny by name; Froissart mentions only Joigny; Baker, de Juyny and de Wanterre.¹ The Prince in his letter to the Corporation notices the capture of the Counts of Auxerre,² Juhny, and the seigneur de Chastillon. The interposition of the cardinal of Perigort is probably correctly interpreted in our Itinerary; the motives assigned by Froissart are of the first order of excellence. Baker notices the increase of the French force during the time wasted in negotiation, but makes no comment on the circumstance.

The account of the battle is very brief, and noticeable principally for the manner in which duration of the struggle is dwelt upon. The author says that in old times men could tell, after the third or fourth or at the outside the sixth pull of the bow, with which side the victory would lie; but that here a single archer fired a hundred arrows, and without hurry, and still neither side yielded. Such an obstinate fight was never heard of. It was said, he further adds, but he will not affirm it for true, that the French saw an armed knight sitting on horseback in the air and fighting against them. The numbers of the prisoners agree nearly with those in the list sent to the bishop of Worcester by the prince himself.

A short diary of the march back to Bordeaux concludes this curious piece of contemporary history.

Celebration of the Nativity in A.D. 1357;

The celebration of the Nativity, A.D. 1357, by the king and queen at Marlborough is confirmed by the attestations of the writs of Privy Seal of the 31st Edw. III. preserved in the Record Office; from these it appears that the king was at Marlborough from the 24th to the 27th of December, A.D. 1357, both included, and that on the 28th he was at Hampstead-Marshall in Berks, while by an entry in the Scotch Roll 31 Edw. III. it is proved that he was again at Marlborough on the 30th of the same month. Our author further states that about the Circumcision (A.D. 1st Jan. 1358) the royal pair moved towards Bristol, where nocturnal hastiludes of hitherto unheard-of magnificence were celebrated. The Privy Seal writs again partially confirm our chronicler's statement, for from them we learn that on the 6th Jan., 31 Edw. III., as well as on the 13th of that month, the king was at Bristol, and again at Marlborough on the 16th. On the 28th we find him again at Hampstead-Marshall, where he appears to have remained until the 30th, when he proceeded to Yel-Hampstead, where we find him on the 31st.

of the feast of S. George in A.D. 1358.

A difficulty.

The next statement, that the king kept the feast of S. George (23rd April), A.D. 1358, at Windsor, is also confirmed by these invaluable instruments, which show him to have been there on the 20th, 23rd, and 25th of April in that year. Now, however, we come to a difficulty. Our author adds that the king and queen stayed during the whole summer at Marlborough and Corsham. There is good reason to doubt the perfect accuracy of this statement as applied to the king. The Privy Seal Writs, Patent and Close Rolls, Fine and Gascon Rolls, show that during nearly the whole of June the king was at Westminster, Chertsey, and Henley; on the 5th, however, it seems that he was at Clarendon in Wiltshire, during nearly the whole of July at the former, and at Hadley and Havering-atte-Bower; in the early part of August at Windsor Park, on the 24th at Clarendon; at Clarendon on 1st and 5th September, at Marlborough on the 14th, 18th, 20th, and 22nd, both included, on the 24th and 29th and on 1st October at Ramsbury, on the 3rd at Windsor, on the 4th at Westminster, and on the 5th at Mortlake.

There appears to be sufficient evidence, therefore, to show that in A.D. 1358 the king at least could not have been at Marlborough during the whole summer; but that he was in the neighbourhood early in June, and in the latter part of August, and there, or near it, during the whole of September, is extremely probable. There seems to be no reason, therefore, to doubt the account given of the accident to the queen at Cors-ham, which is described with just the amount of particularity which we should expect from an inhabitant of the neighbouring abbey of Malmesbury.

The succeeding notices of the death of Isabella the queen-mother at "Risinges, near London," on the day of SS. Timothy and Simphorian (22nd August)¹ A.D. 1358, ¹ Her death is assigned to 26th August, A.D. 1357, by the Continuator of Murimuth (p. 191), and to A.D. 1358 by Knighton (col. 2618). Dr. Pauli (Gesch. von Engl. IV. Stammtafel.) adopts the former date, although the date in the Eulogium is confirmed by an entry on Close Roll 32 E. 3. m. 1, where are found the words "vicesimo secundo die Augusti proximo præterito, quo die . . . mater nostra obiit," in an instrument dated 22 Jan. 32 E. 3. Of the eleven inquisitions taken after her death, one says that she died on 23rd August, one is illegible, seven that she died on 22nd August, and two omit all mention of the date. The place of death is mentioned in one only. M. Buchon is still more unfortunate than Dr. Pauli, for he asserts that the queen actually died in November, A.D. 1358. In a wardrobe-book of her household, preserved in the Record Office there are lists of her clothes, furniture, &c. One of the entries contains a catalogue of her books, which is so curious that I cannot forbear from transcribing it, in the belief that it has never been printed before: "Libri Romanizati:—Unus liber and of her funeral on 27th November¹ in the same year at the church of the Grey Friars in London, appear to have been transcribed with but few alterations from what may be called the rough notes of the author in this Kalendarly Chronicle. They doubtless form the original authority for the common account of the two events; for the Eulogium having been most probably completed down to A.D. 1362 in that year, these entries in it cannot have been written later than four years after the occurrence of the events which they describe, and the original entry, from which they were doubtless taken, probably made as soon as the author heard the news. This earlier entry makes no mention of the place of the queen's death, which it appears, both from the Inquisition post mortem for Wilts in the Record Office, and from a book of accounts of the queen's household among the Cottonian MSS., was Hertford Castle. The description in the Eulogium of Rising Castle as "near London" appears to me to indicate a combination of two accounts, one of which, though imperfect, was accurate as far as it went. The cause of death there given, on the authority probably of popular rumour, to judge from the phrase "dicunt quidam," appears to be hardly reconcilable with the evidence afforded by the Household Accounts; but the dates in our text of the death and funeral are confirmed by the same invaluable document, of which an admirable analysis has been given in the Archæologia (vol. xxxv. p. 454) by Mr. Bond.¹

The accounts of the mission to Calais of the duke of Lancaster and of the expedition of the king in A.D. 1359 are very brief, but display a particularity in dates which point to contemporary authority. The date attributed to the embarkation of the king (27th Oct.) is, however, one day too early; an entry on the Close Rolls 33 Edw. III.,² asserting that it was on the 28th, between daybreak and sunrise, that the king embarked at Sandwich, and that he reached Calais on the same day about the hour of vespers. The account in the Kalendar, on which that in the Chronicle is probably an improvement, is full of inaccuracies; it was most likely written from closely contemporary rumour, before the more authentic reports reached our author, which he has incorporated in the later notices in his Chronicle. We have there the royal expedition of A.D. 1359 described as a mere day's stay in Calais, and the invasion which terminated in the peace of Bretigny, postponed to October in the succeeding year. The date assigned to the embarkation of the duke of Lancaster (27 Sept.) is rather earlier than would be inferred from the statements of Knighton and Froissart.³ The length of his sojourn at Calais it is not easy to discover. Our author's account is probable, for it is clear from what Froissart says that the duke was anxious to leave Calais as soon as possible.

The "nebula lucida" of 25th February, A.D. 1362, is very carefully, though briefly, described; it was most probably nothing more than a very fine aurora. The brilliancy must have been of unusual intensity, however, since it enabled men to thread needles, and to distinguish pebbles, and even grains of dirt. No wonder, therefore, that it "cast a great fear upon those that

A tempest. "saw it. The tempest of the 15th January in the same year is mentioned by most chroniclers of the period; it appears to have been merely a south-wester ("ab Meridie et Occidente proveniens") of great severity, and its ravages seem to have extended over a very wide area.¹

Brignai.

The great battle between the French and the "gentes sine capite," one of the contemporary titles of the Great Company by which France was at this time overrun, stated by our author to have been fought near Montpellier in the beginning of Lent, appears to be the famous battle of Brignai, near Lyons, in which Jacques de Bourbon fell. Our author is more correct in this date than Froissart, who assigns the battle to the Friday after Easter (2nd April), A.D. 1361, which disagrees both with the date, Wednesday before Palm Sunday (6th April), A.D. 1362, given in the epitaph of Jacques de Bourbon, and that, 6th April, A.D. 1362, given in the Grandes Chroniques de France; ² the Eulogium coincides with both as to the year. With regard to the locality of the battle, however, our author is clearly wrong, Montpellier being at a considerable distance from Brignai. It is not unlikely that the fact that De Bourbon was sent from Montpellier by the king of France ³ may have had something to do with the mistake in a contemporary account, written at a distance from the scene of the action. The fortification and victualling of the papal palace at Avignon by Innocent VI. from fear of the attacks of the Companies, the frustration of his intention to remove from Avignon by death¹ from a dropsical disorder, the death of Joan, queen of Scotland, the sitting of the celebrated Parliament in which the Statute of Purveyors was enacted, and pleadings in the English tongue first introduced into the courts of law, are all narrated in clear and concise language, which I think may be safely assumed to be that of our author himself. To the same source I would attribute the curious tirade against the rage of the English for dress in A.D. 1361 and 1362, which immediately succeeds, and which furnishes at once a very good specimen of our chronicler's power of composition, and incidentally a very minute and valuable description of the costume of his countrymen during those years.

His main objection to the prevailing fashions appears to be the effeminacy of the male dress. The "goun," a word which he oddly derives from "gounyg," which properly means, he says, (or is correctly pronounced,) "wounyg, quasi aperta derisio," is not open in front, as is becoming in men, and those who wear them, viewed from behind, look more like women than males; the small hoods, fastened up under the chin, are buttoned after the manner of women; the split boots, which are tied to the "paltok," are called harlots, and "thus one harlot serves another;" while the paltok itself would be more properly worn by an ecclesiastic than a layman, and for the strangest of all conceivable reasons, viz.: because in the Books of Kings it is said that Solomon never in all his life made use of such garments, or, in other words, never put on a "paltok." This will be easily conceded. The profusion of gold, silver, and precious stones worn by all classes, the peaked shoes called "crakowes,"¹ more like the claws of devils than the ornaments of human beings, are also condemned, and a character given of those who wore this costume, which is evidently considerably exaggerated, and in which may perhaps be traced the bitterness of one debarred from the vanities which he condemns. It is hardly possible to help thinking that the memory of the "opera . . . in sæculo præhabita" which our author complains in his poem occasionally disturbed his pious meditations must have here, unconsciously perhaps, lent vigour and pungency to his comparisons. However applicable his other accusations may have been, it is certain that at least "in campis lepores" cannot have been generally true of his fashionable contemporaries, many of whom must have fought at Cressy and Poitiers; and it is certain that their censor must have known that it was false.²

We now come to the visit of the Black Prince to Gascony in A.D. 1363. This is assigned to 9th June, and his arrival at Bordeaux to 11th June. The joyful reception with which he met is confirmed to some extent by Froissart.³ The death of Ralph de Salopia

terbury Tales (Persones Tale, Contra Luxuriam) refers to the costume of a later date.

² Similar accusations to those in the Eulogium are made against the petits maitres of the period, by way of prophecy, by John of Bridlington: "In bello tales nulli fient speciales" (p. 183, l. 15, and p. 186, l. 17). The "swells," however, of that age, as well as of this and of most others, had shown that they could fight when the necessity arose.

gives occasion to some severe remarks on the number of episcopal changes in England at the time, and the simoniacal methods of obtaining ecclesiastical dignities. The outspokenness of our chronicler is worthy of notice ; other examples of it will be seen as we proceed. In the following notice of the Parliament of Oct. A.D. 1363, and of the sumptuary laws therein enacted, the text of the Eulogium coincides almost verbally with that of the Continuation of Murimuth, that is, of Higden ; I hope to show in the sequel that the Continuator has here, and in a few other subsequent passages, followed the Eulogium, and not the Eulogium the Continuator.

Parliament
of October
A.D. 1363.

We now come to a grave chronological difficulty. Our author states that king John of France arrived in London on 6th Nov., A.D. 1363, while the Parliament was sitting, that is, according to his own assertion, on the same day as the king of Cyprus, and a week before the king of Scotland. Now Knighton¹ says that the king of France did not reach London until after the Feast of the Purification (2nd Feb.), A.D. 1363, i.e. A.D. 1364 (the *Grandes Chroniques de France*² fix the exact date on Sunday, 14th Jan.), and though he agrees with the Eulogium in making the two kings present at the same time in London, in which he is in contradiction with Froissart,³ it is difficult to see how both could have been mistaken in a date likely to be so publicly known as that of the arrival of an illustrious prisoner on an important mission, but not less so to explain a similar blunder in an author more recently contemporary than either of them with the event in question.⁴ The death of king John is placed on the 6th April, instead of the 8th. The general order to the clergy to celebrate his funeral service is noticed; and it is asserted that the king accompanied his body to a distance of two leagues from London. Froissart makes no mention of this act of respect in his account of the funeral.¹ The account of the battle which follows agrees in date with the battle of Cocherel, in which Bertrand du Guesclin defeated the Captal de Buch, and in most of the particulars specified. The remark with which the account concludes is curious,

"bellum" tle, in which a king was engaged, and the phrases and "con- conflictio," &c. was not the case.

There seems to be nothing worthy of note in the notices which follow of the works at Windsor and Sheppey, of the frauds of the Lombards,² the Parliament of January, A.D. 1365, the embassy to Flanders in A.D. 1364,³ and the battle of Auray, except the verbal coincidence with the Continuator of Murimuth in the second, the very free application of a proverbial phrase to the king in the third, and the differences between the last of the corresponding narrative in Froissart, who makes no mention of the report noticed by our author that Eustace, nephew of queen Philippa, was present and gained much glory and many prisoners.⁴

The date in the Eulogium, "circa

⁴ The phrase "mediate Dei auxilio et domini Johannis de Chandos," oddly as it sounds, recalls

The birth of Edward, son of the Black Prince,¹ at Angoulême is described with much particularity ; his baptism is said to have been performed "in civitate " Castelli." The words "xxvij die Januarii, primâ die " hebdomadæ," seem to indicate that the 27th Jan. in the year of the birth fell on Sunday ; unfortunately, however, the years, A.D. 1359 and A.D. 1370, are the two nearest years to A.D. 1364 (the date given in the text) in which this is the case. There are two ways of escaping the contradiction. We may assume a mistake in the MS. for "xxviij.," which would make the year A.D. 1364 ; or we may suppose that "prima dies " hebdomadæ " is not the same as "feria prima," but means Monday, which would give A.D. 1365. The latter is the more probable, inasmuch as the chronology of our author seems to require the year to commence after January ; I have therefore adopted it in the margin. Froissart puts the event in A.D. 1363, the Continuator of Murimuth in A.D. 1365.

Date of the birth of Edward, son of the Black Prince.

With regard to the asserted mission of Edmund, earl of Cambridge, the bishop of Ely, and others, to Flanders after Christmas in A.D. 1365, I am unable to discover any satisfactory record of the fact ; it is quite possible, however, that the mission may have been a secret one, not generally known. There are numerous accounts of ambassadors to Flanders enrolled on the Pipe Rolls, but the object of their mission is not generally stated ; and in the few original accounts which the remark of Jean de Montfort to Sir John Chandos on the field after the victory, recorded by Froissart : "Après Dieu, je vous en dois " savoir plus grand gré que à tout " le monde." The "N." preceding the name of De Montfort in our text is evidently a mistake for "J."

here applied to the Black Prince contrasted with that of "princeps " Walliæ," before uniformly given to him, is noticeable and indicative, I think, of the contemporaneousness, as it is certainly of the accuracy of the writer. The duchy of Aquitaine was granted to the prince by patent, 19 July, A.D. 1362.

remain among the Miscellanea of the Queen's Remembrancer, there is nothing which will throw light on the subject. Thomas de Uvedale, knight, certainly accounts for a journey to Flanders on secret service of the king from 19th Jan., 39 Edw. III. (A.D. 1366), to 12th Feb. next, and, in the absence of contradictory evidence, I have provisionally adopted these dates in the margin, but they must be received for what they are worth, and no more.

Earthquake in the island of Rhodes.

The account of the earthquake in the island of Rhodes, given on the authority of Richard Chastellayn, who communicated the particulars orally to a monk of Malmesbury, is very interesting, and remarkable as containing no detail of a miraculous character, though the peculiar severity and destructiveness of the phenomenon might have excused a supernatural interpretation, or a few additions to the narrative of the eye-witness, who, judging from his temperate narrative, seems to have been a very sensible man. The account of the battle between the Christians and the Infidels near Adrianople appears to apply to the defeat of the former in the plains of Sirf-Sindughi¹ on 1st Nov. in the year of the Hegira 766; this (Art de Vérifier les Dates. Table des Eres) commenced on 28th Sept. A.D. 1364, in which year therefore the battle was fought. The Christians were surprised at night by the Turks; and Louis, king of Hungary, barely escaped with his life. Our author, from the phrase "ex relatu eorum qui interfue-" "runt in illo bello," would seem to have obtained his information from eye-witnesses. The Continuator of Murimuth has apparently copied this notice, and erroneously placed the king of Hungary, whom he calls John, after the Eulogium, among the slain.

Battle of Sirf-Sin-

¹ See Hammer, Histoire de l'Empire Ottoman. Ed. Hellert, Paris, 1835, p. 226. M. Hammer, or his translator, places the battle in the year of the Hegira 766, and in A.D. 1363, incorrectly.

The notice of the Parliament of May, A.D. 1366, is remarkable chiefly for the freedom of the author's comment on the claim of Urban V. It is an indication of the strength of popular feeling upon the subject.

The notice of the death of Simon de Islip supplies the date of his death, not to be found in the Registrum Ecclesiæ Anglicanæ of Mr. Stubbs, nor in the last edition of Le Neve. The simplicity of his funeral is remarked, and exemplified by the fact that there were only six lights burning round the corpse. This is followed by a notice of the death of William de Edington, whose bounty to the poor is specially mentioned. The foundation of the College of Bons Hommes is inserted in the Kalendar; it appears from this that the members entered their monastery at Edington in the octave of the Nativity of the Blessed Virgin, A.D. 1358. His successor is not here named.

Next to this entry follows a description of a remarkable celestial phenomenon, which occurs only in the autograph, in which it had been partially deleted, apparently by some fluid when the MS. came into my hands for transcription. I think it very probable that the notice on p. 241 is another account of the same phenomenon; and that this first account was made up from rumour, and was intended to give place to the second, which, it is said, was communicated to the author by two eye-witnesses. The first account affirms that on the 22nd October, at daybreak and the full moon shining, a number of fiery torches, of a blood-red colour, descended from the orb of the moon, and, discharging small torches or jets of fire, darted hither and thither, and sent flashes of fire towards the north-east and north. More than a hundred stars also were seen to fall from a starless sky. The phenomenon was seen by more than three hundred persons in Oxfordshire, Gloucestershire, and Wiltshire.

In the second description the date is changed to Thursday, the 8th October, and the details given are much more minute. The fiery jets are said to have extended from the moon to the earth; some as large as a human thigh, and about three cubits in length, some six, some twelve cubits, very sharp at the end, like a spear, but growing larger towards the base, constructed like a torch, but a hundredfold bigger, and displaying their length in front, i.e. in the direction of motion. The two monks who saw the "visio," and described it to our author, asserted, he says, that it lasted for two whole hours. Many compared the "luminary" (as if the different parts of it had a common origin, or were in some way connected), as they saw it within the concave firmament, to a lighted candle in a house or other hollow space shining through a window or an open chink; and it showed within like a beam of fire, very sharp at the end or point, at the base much wider; and decreasing by degrees down to evanescence, it crossed slowly from the south-west to the north-east.

The author does not intimate that the phenomenon was regarded as supernatural by those who saw it, neither does it appear that he so regarded it himself. His description, in fact, implies an amount of coolness on the part of those who observed it inconsistent with the supposed presence of the miraculous, and an amount of investigation on his own part which would do no discredit even to a positive philosopher.

It is clear that we may quite safely decide with our chronicler that this appearance was not a lunar eclipse.¹

¹ His reasons for this conclusion are the peculiarly satisfactory one that the light of the moon was not at all obscured, and another "quia

"a nullo elemento cruciabatur," which, I confess, I do not understand.

The fall of stars mentioned in both accounts suggests a shower of aërolites, and the moving luminary might have been a large meteor; against this solution there lie the long duration of the appearance and the time of year. One of maximum periods of "falling stars," which occurs now about the end of November, takes place a little later every year, but the annual change is not large enough to bring the date of maximum as early as 8th October (O.S.) in A.D. 1366; for these reasons I think we must reject the meteoric interpretation. Another phenomenon, which agrees well with the description, is the aurora borealis. The fall of stars might in this case very well have been a shower of so-called sparks, such as frequently accompany the flashes and brushes of the true aurora.¹

The Chronicle concludes with a notice of the election of William of Wykeham as bishop of Winchester, a promise of an account of his consecration, and a mention of the popular rumour that John Barnet, bishop of Bath, would be translated to the see of Ely.

ACCOUNT OF THE CONTINUATION.

The manuscript from which the text of the Continuation printed in the present volume has been taken occupies the latter portion of the Cotton MS. Galba E. VII. (f. 190, col. 1, to f. 207, col. 1). It is written in one hand apparently of the former half of the fifteenth century, and is remarkably free from erasures

dorf's Annalen, B. 48. 8. 612 (1839): "Eodem anno (i.e. 1366) die sequenti post festum xi. millia virginum ab hora matutina usque ad primam visæ sunt quasi stellæ de cælo cadere continua" (? continue), "et in tanta magnitudine quod nemo narrare sufficit." and interlineations. It is therefore in all probability not the autograph of the author of the Chronicle which it represents; but it is evidently a nearly contemporary copy.

The narrative extends from A.D. 1364 to A.D. 1413, commencing two years before the date of the last entry in the Eulogium itself, and is full of matter of great interest and value. A very cursory examination is sufficient to show that either it must have been composed at very different periods, or that more than one source has been drawn upon in its compilation; for in the account of the marriage of Richard II. with Anne of Bohemia the writer mentions Philip the Hardy, duke of Burgundy, in these words: "Qui comitatum nunc habet," which evidently imply that the duke was alive when they were originally written; they must therefore have been first written before A.D. 1404, in which year he died. But the entry which describes the death of Wickliffe in A.D. 1384 also notices his exhumation and the dispersion of his ashes, which did not take place until A.D. 1428, after which date therefore the entry must have been made, whether in the present Chronicle or in the narrative here followed by its author.

I am unable, however, to say from what sources, if it be not entirely original, this curious fragment has been compiled; that a great part of it is not to be found elsewhere, original or not, I think there can be very little doubt. A few extracts from it have been already printed in the Appendix to a volume published by the Camden Society (an English Chronicle of the reigns of Richard II., Henry IV., Henry V., and Henry VI., 1856), under the editorship of the Rev. J. S. Davies;¹ Dr.

¹ The readings given by Mr. Davies differ in many instances from my own. I have thought it advisable to record the more important variations from my text in the footnotes, where I have distinguished them by the affix "Da."

Pauli has also quoted it occasionally in his History of England for the reign of Henry IV., sometimes directly, sometimes from the extracts in Leland's Collectanea;¹ Bishop Wilkins has taken from it his account of the Councils of Oxford and London in A.D. 1408 and A.D. 1409; and Speed has used it through an English translation (forming a portion of the Chronicle edited by Mr. Davies mentioned above).

Nothing is known of its author; and I have been unable to discover anything which will lead to his identification. Those writers who have not examined the autograph of the Eulogium itself have generally assumed, naturally enough, that the compiler of that work and of the present belonged to the same monastery.² That the writer of the Continuation and the scribe of the MS. of the Eulogium which precedes it in the volume from which it is here printed were inmates of the same religious house is not perhaps so very improbable; but there is nothing whatever to show that the scribe in question was an inmate of the ¹ By what process Dr. Pauli has arrived at the remarkable conclusion that the Chronicle throws light on the relations between Henry IV. and his son, the Prince of Wales, I am utterly unable to divine. Certainly not from reading the work.

² Thus Leland (Collectanea, vol. i. pt. ii. p. 308) heads his extracts from the latter part of the Eulogium and the Continuation with the title: "Ex paralipomenis sive derelictis ab autore Eulogii," even confounding the writers of the two works, and by implication their places of residence. The quotations which follow this heading commence with a few extracts from the last part of the Eulogium, and are continued without a break into the Continua- tion through half a dozen pages. Mr. Davies also, in the Preface to his "English Chronicle of the reigns of Richard II. to Henry VI.," alluded to in the text, says: "It may be inferred that the writer of our English Chronicle was of the same monastery as the authors of the Eulogium," meaning the Eulogium "proper" and its Continuation. It would seem that Leland had used some holograph MS. of both works, for it is very unlikely that he would have assumed two parts of a manuscript in different hands to have been the work of one author. If so, there must be some MS. of both Chronicles which I have not succeeded in discovering.

abbey of Malmesbury, to which, I think, unquestionably, the author of the Eulogium itself may be asserted to have belonged; and further, scanty as the evidence in the Continuation itself is which may fairly be held to indicate the place in which it was written, the whole of that evidence points to Canterbury and not to Malmesbury at all, of which there is not a single notice to be found in the whole course of the narrative.¹

The author being unknown, we are thrown entirely upon the work itself for evidence of his trustworthiness, as well as of the value of the facts which he has to communicate. But before examining into these points, it will be desirable to give an account of the period included in the Chronicle.

It commences with a notice of the visit of the king of Cyprus to France and England for aid against the Saracens, and passing to the contest between Peter the Cruel and Henry the Bastard,² gives a brief ac-

"munimenta, et scripturas in domo judicii combusserunt;" (p. 358), "Feretrum Sancti Thomæ Cantuariensis Symoni de Burley constabulario Doveriæ tradebatur custodiendum in castro Doveriæ, et ordinatum fuit quod omnes homines recederent cum bonis suis ab Insula Thaneti et eam vacuam dimitterent; sed hoc monachi Cantuarienses et insulam non patiebantur;" (pp. 379, 380), the notice of the visit of Richard II. to the shrine of S. Thomas.

count of the battle of Najara, and of the murder of Peter by order of Henry. We then come to the renewal of the war between England and France, the invasion of Ponthieu and the taking of Abbeville,¹ the appeal of the Gascon nobles to the king of France against the exactions of the Black Prince, the commencement of his illness, the proceedings of Du Guesclin in Aquitaine, the rebellion of De Clïçon against John duke of Brittany, the elevation of Simon Langham to the cardinalate, and his interposition in favour of Edward III. with Urban V., the visit of the pope to Rome, the sack of Limoges by the Black Prince, his return into England, the return of the duke of Brittany, and the second assumption of the title of king of France by the king of England.

We then come to a curious account of the publication of the famous bull of pope Gregory XI., excommunicating the Florentines by William Courtenay, bishop of London, at Paul's Cross, and the trouble which his conduct brought him into. This narrative seems to be original; at least I am unable to find a similar account in any other chronicle of the period which I have consulted.² It appears from their text that the king, on the Florentines being brought before him by the mayor of the city of London, promised them his protection, in spite of the interdict threatened in the bull to those potentates who should disobey its mandate; that the bishop was immediately summoned before the chancellor and asked how he had dared to publish the bull without consulting the king and his council against the statutes of the realm. He could only reply: "Because the pope commanded it." "Choose then," said the chancellor, "between losing your temporalities and revoking your words with your own mouth." The bishop naturally chose the latter alternative, and with the greatest difficulty obtained permission to make the necessary revocation by proxy. His official representative seems to have been a most thoroughgoing performer in his line; and must have been, to judge from his conduct, tolerably practised in doing the "dirty work" of others. He denied utterly in the face of the very persons who had been present, that the bishop had spoken a single word about the interdict; and actually expressed the greatest astonishment that his audience should have so completely misunderstood the speaker. "It is wonderful," he said, "when you are in the habit of hearing so many sermons in this place, that you should not understand what people say." How this explanation was received by the audience the chronicler does not tell us.

Passing over the expedition of the dukes of Lancaster and of Brittany into France in A.D. 1371 (apparently a mistake for 1373), and the victory of the earl of Hereford in the same year¹ over the Flemings and French, we come to a statement that in A.D. 1372 the duke of Lancaster went over to Bruges and remained there during the whole summer occupied in negotiations for peace with the duke of Berry, and that he returned unsuccessful to England. There seems to be some confusion here. The duke of Lancaster in A.D. 1372 appears to have returned to England and remained there until the ensuing July, when he entered France with the duke of Brittany. He returned to England after his expedition with the duke of Brittany in April A.D. 1374.

He seems to have been at Calais during the winter of A.D. 1374-5, and to have proceeded to Bruges in A.D. 1375, where a truce was concluded between England and France on 27th June in that year. I have, however, allowed the date in the text to be repeated in the margin, as I am unable to accommodate, in any satisfactory manner, the real date and the narrative to one another.

We now come to the expedition of the duke into France in A.D. 1373, all notice of the duke of Brittany who accompanied him being, however, omitted; and two incidents introduced here, one at least of which certainly belongs to the former expedition in A.D. 1369, namely, the visit of the earl of Warwick,¹ by permission of the king, and his subsequent death at Calais by poison, according to the contemporary popular report, says the chronicler. An earl of Warwick died there of the plague on 13th November, A.D. 1369.² The blunder, if there be not an actual confusion here between the two expeditions of A.D. 1369 and A.D. 1373, may have arisen as follows: Thomas de Beauchamp, earl of Warwick, second son of the earl mentioned above, actually did accompany the duke of Lancaster in the expedition of A.D. 1373, as appears by the documentary evidence in the foot-note;³ and

² Out of twenty-two inquisitions taken after his death, preserved in the Record Office, one is illegible, two omit the date of his death, seventeen give it as 13th November, one as 3rd November, and one as 14th November (Wednesday after the feast of S. Martin), A.D. 1369; three only mention Calais as the place of his decease.

a confusion between him and his father would have been followed, as a natural consequence, by a confusion between their modes of death. This last earl, however, did not die until A.D. 1402.

A notice of the visit of Simon Langham to England as papal nuncio follows, with an account of the serious reprimand which he received from the papal court: "Pro eo quod suum deposuit capicium regi Angliæ." His peace was not made until he had returned to Rome, and proved by satisfactory testimony "quod non nisi medietatem capicii deponebat." On his way to Rome he made a present of money to each of the monks of Canterbury.

We now come to a very curious and interesting account of the proceedings of a great council at Westminster after Pentecost, A.D. 1374. I can find no notice of it elsewhere.¹ The cause of convocation was declared by the chancellor to be a claim on the part of Gregory XI. as lord spiritual and paramount of the realm of England, by the gift of king John, to a subsidy against the rebellious Florentines, which he commanded the king to levy by way of tallage. The Black Prince, William Whittlesey, archbishop of Canterbury, all the lords spiritual and temporal, the provincial of the Friars Preachers, John Owtred, a monk of Durham, John Mardisley, a Friar Minor, who had preached before Edward III. on the day of Pentecost, and Thomas Asshburne, an Augustinian friar, are stated to have been present.

The spiritual lords, being first asked, all declared that the pope was "dominus omnium." The provincial of the Friars Preachers begged to be excused from replying, and advised that, according to the custom of his order in matters of difficulty, the hymn "Veni Creator," or the mass "De Spiritu Sancto," should be sung, so that the truth might be more easily arrived at. The monk of Durham replied, by way of a collation, taking as his text, "Ecce duo gladii hic," and attempting to show that S. Peter had both the temporal and the spiritual power. Mardisley immediately quoted the command, "Mitte gladium tuum in vaginam," proving (in the estimation, at least of the narrator, but the reasoning is peculiar), that the two swords did not signify the two powers in question, and declaring that Christ possessed no temporal dominion, nor did He leave it to His apostles, but on the other hand taught them to relinquish it. He seems, by the account given, to have proved his position by an abundance of evidence, scriptural, scholastic, and historical. The Augustinian alleged that Peter is known by his keys, Paul by his sword. "The pope is Peter carrying the keys, 'in foro confessionis.' You, my lord prince, were wont to be Paul carrying the sword. But because you have laid aside the sword of the Lord, Peter will not recognize Paul. Wield it, therefore, and he will do so." With this speech the first day of the discussion ended. The archbishop remarked that there was good counsel enough in England without the friars. To which the prince is said to have replied: "It was your fatuity which obliged us to call them together; had we followed your counsel, we should have lost the kingdom." Next day the archbishop had advanced so far as to be able to say that he did not know what to answer. A sharp reproof from the prince, however, soon brought him to the desired conclusion. "Answer, you ass ('asine')! your duty is to inform all of us." To which he replied, that it was his wish that the pope should not be lord here. And, adds the chronicler, one may fancy a little mischievously, "Et hoc consequenter omnes prælati dixerunt." When it came to the turn of the monk of Durham, he made the same answer: "Quod non erat dominus." "Where are the two swords, then?" asked the prince. "My lord, I am better informed now than I was." The expressed opinion of a majority had produced its usual effect.

¹ It is not enrolled on the Rolls of Parliament; and Mr. Parry, in his Parliaments of England, makes no mention of it, though he once quotes an account of a council from the Eulogium itself through Sir Robert Cotton (Cottoni Posthuma).

The temporal lords all agreed in declaring that, as king John had given his kingdom to the court of Rome without the consent of the realm and the barons, he had done that which he could not do lawfully; and that, therefore, the Charter of Donation was of no force.

We now come to the defeat of the earl of Pembroke by the Spanish on his way to Gascony. This event is not dated at all, but appears to have been intended to belong to the year A.D. 1374. The same remark applies to the notice of the king's unsuccessful attempt to relieve Rochelle, and of its capture by the French, both of which appear to be placed two years too late. The Third Pestilence (A.D. 1369) is also placed in the same year. The latter years of Edward III. are passed over very rapidly. In the notice of the attack of the French and Spanish (p. 340) there seems to be a confusion between two separate invasions, the one in A.D. 1377, in which the Isle of Wight, Winchelsea, Rotyndene, and Rye were ravaged,¹ and another in A.D. 1380, in which the French sailed up the Thames and burned Gravesend.² We have next a full account of the origin of the Great Schism after the death of Gregory XI., with a summary of the opinions of the learned ("sapientes") on various points of difficulty arising out of the secession of the cardinals.

In the account which follows of the murder of John Hawle, in Westminster Abbey, there are two important differences from the ordinary version of the facts. In the first place, the prisoner, who was in the custody of Hawle and Shakyll, is not generally asserted to have been the count de Denia himself, but his son, whom he had left as a hostage in England on his return to Spain; and it is not commonly said to have been the Spanish who demanded the delivery of the prisoner by Richard II., but the duke of Lancaster who offered a price for him to his custodians. The rest of the narrative agrees with the common accounts. The mention of the passage¹ which the deacon was reading when Hawle was killed is curious, and certainly seems to point to closely contemporary information. What follows calls for no particular notice, except, perhaps, the account of a discussion on the privileges of sanctuary claimed by Westminster Abbey (pp. 345-6), and the epithet "flos Oxoniæ," applied to Wickliffe (p. 345),²

² It is difficult to assign here the true date of the events related in text. The position: "quod domini "temporales . . . auferre possunt "bona temporalia ab ecclesiasticis delinquentibus" is placed among the list of Wickliffe's earliest heresies in the Fasciculi Zizaniorum (p. 3); and these appear to have been first openly avowed in A.D. 1363, the approximate date of his doctorate according to Mr. Shirley (Fasc. Ziz. xvii.) The Continuator of the Eulogium, however, appears to refer to some disputations held at Oxford in the year (which he calls 1378) preceding Wickliffe's appearance before the archbishop of Canterbury and the bishop of London, in consequence of the bull of Gregory XI. (Fasc. Ziz. pp. 242-4), which latter event he places in A.D. 1379. It actually took place early in A.D. 1378 (Fasc. Ziz. xxxi. note 1). I have, therefore, given 1377 as the date of the disputation. The dates assigned to the commencement of Wickliffe's heresies by Walsingham (p. 191) and the Continuator of Murimuth (p. 121) are respectively 1377 and 1376. With regard to the marginal date assigned to the wreck of the fleet sent to Gascony under John de Arundel, I have founded it on a document in the Record Office, pre-until we come to an interesting narrative (pp. 347, 348, 349) of the proceedings at Oxford upon the bull of Gregory XI. directed to the chancellor against the great reformer. The hesitation of the university is well known.¹ But nothing is said here about the interruption of the subsequent proceedings at Lambeth by the irruption of the London mob.

Passing over the intervening part of the Chronicle,² we come (pp. 350, 351) to a short account of the condemnation of Wickliffe's doctrine of the eucharist in A.D. 1381(?),³ in which the reply of John de Tys-syngton⁴ to the famous Confession is mentioned as being extant in the Chronicler's day among the archives of the university. The account here given of Wickliffe's conclusions is tolerably accurate, and very temperate, the only intimation of the chronicler's views being found in the favourable opinion which he expresses of Tyssyngton's tract.

The narrative of the rebellion under Wat the Tyler is curious. The chronicler agrees with Knighton (or the pseudo-Knighton rather), (col. 2635), and Walsingham (p. 249), in opposition to the monk of Evesham (p. 26), in his account of the destruction of the Savoy.

The mob, he says, carried nothing away with them ; and the simple words he attributes to them, "Nolimus esse fures," are probably much nearer the truth than Knighton's more elaborate, "Zelatores veritatis et justitiæ, non fures aut latrones." He differs from most annalists, however, in representing the young king as greatly alarmed.¹

The accounts of the proceedings of the parliament of A.D. 1386 against Michael de la Pole, of the council at Nottingham in A.D. 1387, the narrative of events occurring between that council and the parliament of A.D. 1388, and the account of the proceedings of this last parliament, seem to exhibit but few peculiarities, and to agree closely with the narratives of the printed chroniclers and the evidence of the rolls of parliament themselves. But there is a difficulty as to the date of the embassy of the duke of Lancaster to Amiens (p. 369), which is assigned to A.D. 1395, instead of A.D. 1392 ;² and of that of the parliament before

² See Walsingham, p. 347. Knighton, col. 2471, says he went to Calais. According to both he went again in A.D. 1393 (Wals. 349 ; Kn. col. 2471). According to Walsingham he returned about the Feast of S. John Baptist in A.D. 1394 (p. 350). Froissart (iv. c. 27) says that the "assemblée des seigneurs de France et d'Angleterre . . . se fit en la bonne cité d'Amiens sur forme de paix et de trêves en celle saison que on compta pour lors en l'an de grâce notre Seigneur mil trois cent quatre vingt et onze, au mi-

"carême." The duke of Lancaster returned to Windsor, he further says, on 23rd April, where the proposals of France were discussed. The French ambassadors returned to France shortly afterwards. Again he states that at the parliament of Michaelmas ensuing the truce was prolonged to 24th June, A.D. 1394 ; and that finally peace was concluded at Lolinghen in A.D. 1393. The conditions mentioned in our text (p. 369) as having been brought to England by the duke agree nearly with those specified by the French historian (iv. c. 27). A series of documents printed in the Fœdera proves that a truce was concluded at Lolinghen on 18th June, A.D. 1389, to last until 16th Aug., A.D. 1392 ; this truce was confirmed by Richard which, on his return, he laid the proposals of the French king.

The account of the capture of the earl of Arundel (pp. 372-3) is confirmed by the Parliament Rolls (III. 418), as is also that of the murder of the duke of Gloucester (p. 373), and of the proceedings of the parliament of A.D. 1397-8, which are given at great length (pp. 373-377). The visit of the king to the shrine of S. Thomas of Canterbury before his expedition to Ireland, the landing of Henry of Lancaster, the return of the king,¹ the treachery of Sir Thomas Percy, the interview at Flint (which is erroneously

II. on 10th August, A.D. 1389. On the 8th April, A.D. 1391 (French Roll. 15 Ric. II. m. 2) it was prorogued by the duke to Michaelmas, A.D. 1392, and thence to Michaelmas, A.D. 1393; the prorogation being ratified by the king on 5th May, A.D. 1392. It was again prorogued (Fr. Roll. 17 Ric. II. m. 17) on 28th April, A.D. 1393 to Michaelmas A.D. 1394; and finally prorogued by the duke at Lolinghen (Fr. Roll. 17 Ric. II. m. 3.) on 27th May, A.D. 1394 to Michaelmas, A.D. 1398, the prorogation being confirmed on 5th June, A.D. 1394. Lastly, at Paris, on the 9th March, A.D. 1396, a truce of 28 years, from Michaelmas, A.D. 1398, was concluded in extension of this last prorogation, and this was confirmed 11th March, A.D. 1396. It seems difficult to decide what date can be intended by A.D. 1395 in our text. I have placed in A.D. 1394 the parliament at London, to which our chronicler says that the duke brought back the proposals of the French king, identifying it with the parliament at Westminster, 17 Ric.

II. Mr. Davies identifies it with the parliament of Winchester in 16 Ric. II. But this is, I submit, unlikely to be the parliament intended by our chronicler, inasmuch as there is no allusion to the conditions of peace apparent during its sittings (Rolls, III. 300), while on the other hand peace was assented to by the parliament of A.D. 1394 (Rolls, III. 315-6). The duke was present at both (ib., 300, 314). The difficulty is to hit upon a parliament at which the duke of Lancaster was present, and in which the conditions of peace are alluded to, after the meeting at Amiens and before the peace of Lolinghen in A.D. 1394. That of A.D. 1394 satisfies all these conditions. Again in the parliament of November, A.D. 1391, the duke is asked to go, and consents (Rolls, III. 286 b). The account of the claim made in this parliament by John of Ghent in behalf of his son is certainly erroneous.

¹ In the margin I have given the commonly received date of the king's landing in Wales (25th July). But called Conway), between the duke of Lancaster, Thomas de Arundel, and the king, the renunciation and deposition of Richard II., and the coronation of Henry IV., are all minutely and accurately narrated; and the account ends with a character in which the luxury, effeminacy, and gluttony of the deposed monarch are especially dwelt upon.

In pp. 385-6 is a very curious account of the discovery of the earl of Huntingdon's conspiracy, which I am unable to find elsewhere. It is quoted by Leland among his extracts from the Eulogium; and from Leland by Mr. Webb, in the notes to Creton's Histoire (Archæologia, XX.) as the account given in the "Malmesbury Chronicle." There can be little doubt that it is founded on contemporary rumour. The death of Richard II. is attributed, with many chroniclers, to voluntary starvation, in consequence of grief at the failure of the plot (p. 387).¹

The reply of the parliament to the advice of the bishop of S. Asaph in the matter of the complaint of Owen Glyndwyr, "se de scuris nudipedibus non curare," rests, I believe, on the sole authority of the present Chronicle. It is quoted by Dr. Pauli from Leland.

The long account of the proceedings against Sir Roger Clarendon, the prior of Laund, a Minorite of Aylesbury, and eight Minorites of Leicester (pp. 389-393), is apparently original, and is certainly full of interest; and though, perhaps, the details of the conversations between the king and the friars may have from an account, enrolled in the foreign accounts, 1-6 Hen. IV., of John Lufwyk, esquire, receiver of the chamber, it appears that Richard II. did not leave Dublin until 27th July.

bella, as appears by an account of Richard Cifford, clerk, keeper of her wardrobe (For. Accts. 1-6 Hen. IV.), took place on 31st July, 2 Hen. IV., "quo die prædicta nuper regina restituta fuit patri suo regi Franciæ apud Loulyngham." been somewhat amplified, there can be little doubt, I think, that they are in the main authentic.¹

¹ The date (p. 384) assigned to the capture of Edmund Mortimer by Glyndwr is found in an account (For. Accts. 7-13 Hen. IV.) rendered by John Hayvarin, esquire, and John Depenham. The latter accounts for the issues of the manor of Gussich, late of Edmund Mortimer, from 22nd June, 3 Hen. IV., "quo die dictus Edmundus captus fuit per rebelles Wall'." The date of the capture of lord Grey of Ruthin by Glyndwr, is inferred from an entry on the Chester Recognizance Roll, 2-3 Hen. IV. (m. 6), dated 18th April (3 Hen. IV.), in which the event is spoken of as having just taken place. I have to thank my colleague, Peter Turner, Esq., for calling my attention to this instrument.

The date of the attack on the Isle of Wight by the count de S. Pol (p. 399) may be inferred from an entry on Close Roll 5 Hen. IV., p. 1, m. 21 d. (Rym. viii. 343). That of the siege of Cardiff by Glyndwr (p. 401) I infer from an account (For. Acc. 1-6 Hen. IV.) of William Rye, serjeant of the pistrina, of receipts of money, provisions, pay of men-at-arms, archers, and mariners, to proceed to Cardiff Castle, to remove the siege, 5 Hen. IV., laid by the Welsh rebels. There is an item of pay for six days in December, 5 Hen. IV. That of the siege of the Castle of Marc (p. 401) is obtained from Close Roll 6 Hen. IV. m. 10 (Rym. viii. 397). That of the appointment of Thomas of Lancaster as keeper of the sea (p. 401) is found on Patent Roll 6 Hen. IV. p. 1, m. 4. That of the imprisonment of the countess of Oxford (p. 401) from an account of Peter Bukton, surveyor of her possessions (For. Accts. 1-6 Hen. IV.), appointed by Pat. 8 May, 5 Hen. IV. (Pat. 5 H. 4, p. 2, m. 19). The account runs from this date to 30th Sept. next, and states that by writ under the G.S. 5 Dec., 6 Hen. IV. (Pat. 6. H. 4. p. 1. m. 14), the king pardoned her and restored her possessions. That of the capture and execution of Serle (p. 402) from an account (For. Accts. 1-6, Hen. IV.) of Thos. Swynbourne, sheriff of Essex and Herts, of his expenses "in executione tractationis Willielmi Serle proditoris infra villam regis Colcestr., etc., anno quinto," and another in the same series of Thos. Wilughby, late sheriff of Lincoln, who states that he received Serle at Melton Mowbray on the 1st August, 5 Hen. IV. (A.D. 1404), and took him to Lenn-Episcopi on the 14th. That of the marriage of the princess Blanche (p. 403) from an account (For. Accts. 1-6 Hen. IV.) of Richard Clifford, keeper of her wardrobe, fr. 21 Feb. 3 Hen. IV. to 6 July next, "quo die præfata filia regis sponsata fuit . . filio regis Romanorum . ." The date of the marriage of the princess Philippa (p. 409) may be inferred from the account of Richard Clifford, clerk (For. Accts. 7-13 Hen. IV.), late keeper of the wardrobe to that princess. He accounts from 14th July 7 Hen. IV. (A.D. 1406), to . . . Nov. next, when he delivered the receipts of his office to her by indenture at Lounde "[post] sponsalia ejusdem filie regis ibidem regi Daciæ." The Roll is much decayed.

The date (p. 397) assigned to the battle of Shrewsbury, 22nd July, is a day later than that given by Walsingham (p. 369), which is confirmed by a very curious account to be found among the foreign accounts of the Court of Exchequer 1-6 Hen. IV. I give an abstract of it in the foot-note.¹

From this point to the end of the Chronicle there is little that calls for special remark.

RELATION BETWEEN THE EULOGIUM AND THE CONTINUATION OF THE CHRONICLE OF ADAM DE MURIMUTH.

The Eulogium might be described, with sufficient accuracy, as a new edition of the Polichronicon, with a Continuation down to the year A.D. 1366. The Continuation of the Chronicle of Adam de Murimuth has already been described, with perfect accuracy, as a portion of the Polichronicon and its Continuation.² It would be likely, à priori, therefore, that there should be occasional coincidences between the two works; and this is actually the case. In pp. 202-3, 204, 205, 206, 207, 212-13, 232, 234, 238, of the present volume, are to be found passages closely approximating to others in pp. 171, 172, 173, 175, 177, 198, 199, 200-1, of the Continuation (ed. Hog.). In order to exhibit the more clearly the nature of the approxi-

Vernon, knt., "qui nuper contra regem . . . se insurrexerunt apud Husefeld' juxta Salop' die Sabbati in vigilia Beate Marie Magdalene anno quarto regis hujus et per ipsum victi," etc., one quarter was sent to London, one to Bristol, one to Newcastle-on-Tyne, one (with the two heads) to Chester. The remains appear to have been preserved in sacks, tied and sealed, with "clowes, comyn, anys," salt, &c., and there is an item for "perbelyng' eorum dem quarteriorum." i.e. the par-boiling of the quarters of Percy. With regard to the first six of these passages, I think that a simple inspection of the two texts will at once suggest a great probability that the Continuation and the Eulogium have been both copied from a common source, which it is obvious must have been in this case the Polichronicon. The Eulogium, as I have attempted to show in the Preface to volume II., having been completed down to A.D. 1362 in that year, and the Polichronicon having been undoubtedly brought down to a date later than A.D. 1347 before A.D. 1362, there can be no doubt that Higden did not use the Eulogium in these passages; and nearly as little therefore that our author has continued to draw upon him in the latter part of his Fifth Book as it is certain he has drawn upon him in many portions of the four preceding books. The coincidence between the two here also, as before, is not accurately verbal; in the later work we find transpositions and amplifications of phraseology, and sometimes additional particulars, the result, very likely, of newer information and more extensive inquiry.

When we pass, however, to the consideration of the last four of the parallel passages in the Eulogium and the Continuation, the difficulty of rightly assigning priority to one of the two is very considerably increased. The only known MS. of the second work is that preserved in Queen's College, Oxford, from which Hall's edition was printed. It is a holograph MS. terminating with the year A.D. 1380, and therefore written about or after that date. Nothing is known at present which would lead to the determination of the date of composition of the work itself except the fact mentioned in the Introduction to the Monumenta (p. 32), that in the year A.D. 1387 Trevisa employed it down to A.D. 1361 in the compilation of his own chronicle. Before that date, therefore, it must have been completed down to A.D. 1361. If now we assume provisionally that the text of the Queen's College MS. exactly represents the original text of the Continuation in the portions referred to below, that is, if we assume that the notices of the later events are not additions made to the earliest text by a later hand and subsequently copied into the text either of the Queen's College MS. or its original, we may allege the following facts as establishing the priority of the Eulogium :

1. The notice by the Continuator in the account of the birth in A.D. 1365 of Edward of Angoulême, son of the Black Prince, of his death in his seventh year, that is, in A.D. 1372, before which event therefore the entry of the birth could not have been written.
2. The notice, in the account of the matrimonial negotiations between England and Flanders in A.D. 1364, of the subsequent marriage of Margaret, daughter of the count of Flanders, to Philip of Burgundy, which took place in A.D. 1369, before which date therefore the account could not have been written.

As it has been proved in the Preface to volume II. that the last entry in the Eulogium could not have been written at latest after A.D. 1367, the existence of either of these notices in the Continuation would be sufficient to prove the priority of our author on the assumption which we have made.

If, however, the assumption itself be not admitted, and much may be alleged against its admission, there are still, it seems to me, sufficient critical grounds for asserting, or at the least for refusing to relinquish, the belief that it is the Continuator of Murimuth who has followed our author, and not the latter who has copied from the former. I will enumerate the peculiarities which induce this conclusion. The remarkably ungrammatical construction in p. 232, "ubi damnatur omne ornamentum argenteum. . . . nisi fuerit talis qui xl. libras argenti per annum poterat expendere," which is peculiarly characteristic of the Latin style of our author, is found in the Continuation (p. 198), the style of which is entirely free from similar blemishes in all other portions of the work. Again, our author's mistake of calling Louis, king of Hungary, "Johannes" (p. 238), is found in the Continuation (p. 200). In addition to committing these two suspicious blunders, the Continuator, in the parallel passages (pp. 199, 200), omits the references to contemporary rumour found in the Eulogium, and in the last (pp. 200-1) might be almost said to have arranged in good order the broken jottings of the Eulogium, which may almost be supposed to have been taken down from particulars communicated viva voce to the author. It is certainly in this instance infinitely more difficult to believe that our author followed and amplified the Continuator¹ than that the Continuator arranged and condensed the materials before him in the Eulogium, copying the mistakes which he found there, and adding, we may remember, a few of his own.

On these grounds, I think, it may be concluded that in the last four of the parallel passages enumerated above, it is not the author of the Eulogium who follows the Continuator, but the latter who either draws from the former or from the sources employed by him; and bearing in mind the marks of originality in the autograph of our Chronicle, we may decide with fair probability, I think, that the Continuator has been indebted, mediately at least, to the Eulogium itself.

HISTORICAL CREDIBILITY AND VALUE OF THE WORKS.

The credibility of a witness to historical facts depends jointly, like the credibility of any other witness, upon his desire to tell the truth, and upon his power of telling it. The value of his work depends simply upon the importance of the facts to which he testifies, and this importance may vary with the objects and tastes of every new reader.

To commence with the credibility of our witness, it is clear that his power of recording the truth, the desire being presupposed, depends jointly upon his power of acquiring a knowledge of the truth and his power of accurately reproducing that knowledge. In order, therefore, to evaluate with complete accuracy the trustworthiness of this or of any other historical work, so far at least as it relates to matter not so antecedently improbable as to render superfluous all examination of the evidence in its favour,¹ we ought to be

¹ This is, perhaps, not the place to discuss the influence of belief in miracles on the credibility of a mediæval annalist. It seems clear, however, that such a belief would be far less likely to affect injuriously the powers of observation and judgment in reference to common unmiraculous events in an age when it was universally accepted than in ours in which it is the badge of a contemptible minority. Yet we should, I think, be hardly justified now in refusing to ask the most determined spiritualist to direct us from S. Paul's to Charing Cross. Why, then, should we doubt the mediæval historian's statement that an accident happened to the queen of Edw. III. at Corsham, because we find that he has also recorded the legend of the Old Woman of Berkeley, and the appearance of an armed man in the air at the battle of Poitiers? Yet a rejection of all the testimony of all supernaturalists seems to be implied in the condemnation passed by the late Mr. Buckle, upon the whole body of mediæval historians, whom he has declared to be all unworthy of credit, because some of their number have recorded miraculous events. The truth is that mediæval miracles, excluding those which are misinterpretations of natural events or merely extraordinary facts, would have been extremely difficult of disproof, if those who heard of them had been inclined to sift the evidence in their favour. There were many peculiarities about them which rendered their investigation difficult or impossible; the locality of most of them was remote, the epoch of very many of them distant, and, in the entire absence of those general principles in accordance with which we should now reject similar narratives without any examination at all, the examination necessary to justify their rejection was, in almost all cases, impossible. Besides this, many of the tales themselves were recommended to believers by the support which they afforded to the "side of virtue;" and it is by no means impossible that a pious monk, innocent of all idea of "Laws of Nature," rather able to establish by sufficient evidence the personal veracity of the writer, to ascertain his relation to motives of falsehood, his position with regard to means of information, and his powers of what may be conveniently called "accurate repetition," including his character as a transcriber of written documents, and his character as a perpetuator of oral narratives. The evidence on each of these points might be either derived from the Chronicle or independent of it, either direct or indirect, and any or all of these. On some points, as the veracity of the author, his own direct testimony would be clearly inadmissible.

In dealing with those portions of the work which are actually known to be derived from authorities of established credibility, or, if independent of them, verifiable by comparison with their statements, the consideration of the personal veracity of the author need not of necessity enter into the investigation; but in all cases in which he is the sole known witness, or the sole known original witness, to a fact, it is, or ought to be, clear that his character for honesty and accuracy, as represented by competent witnesses, would be an important and necessary element of the materials for forming a conclusion. Unfortunately, in the case of most mediæval annalists, this sort of evidence to character is either wanting or worthless; generally of

of a critical temper in the matters of this world, a tolerably keen sifter of testimony to ordinary events, might yet, for the sake of an apparent revelation, the moral, or the example, lay aside his shrewdness and surrender his belief to some now transparent tale of a saintly apparition "in punishment of wickedness and vice," or "in maintenance of true religion and virtue." Even in the present day, hundreds of persons who would reject a simply extraordinary story without investigation, would accept in a similar manner a decidedly miraculous one, more especially if it tended to support a favourite opinion; so impossible is it to conclude from the effect of the professedly supernatural to the treatment of that which makes no claim to anything more than rarity of occurrence.

a date far later than that of the work itself, and often based upon an estimate of the accuracy of the author as a mere compiler. There is, in fact, as it has been happily said, "nothing but the case to try the witness by, and nothing but the witness to try the case by."

The present instance forms no exception to these remarks; the earliest witness to the truthfulness of our author being the compiler Pits, whose estimate, though certainly quite independent of the work, for it is perfectly clear that he never read a line of it, does not show a pedigree of sufficient antiquity to entitle it to much consideration. The testimony of the earliest known witness, Capgrave, comes down to us at second hand, and on the untrustworthy authority of Bale, and besides is silent as to the character of our chronicler. Boston, of Bury, who might have given contemporary evidence, omits all notice of the Eulogium from his catalogue, so far as it is represented by Tanner and the Middle-Hill MS.; and besides this, it did not apparently enter into the plan of his work to give a critical estimate of the writers whom he enumerates.

We are, therefore, reduced to the evidence of the author himself, and the evidence to be derived from an examination of his work. The former, indirectly given in the Proem to the Chronicle, where he tells us that he had been often pressed by his prior to undertake an historical work, is hardly admissible in proof of his character for truthfulness, as it is in proof of the other qualities needed to constitute a credible analyst, for we must evidently assume that the statement itself is true, in order to establish the truthfulness in question. There are accompanying particulars, however, confessions of sinfulness, evil thoughts, weakness, weariness at the lessons and prayers to which he was compelled to listen, and even of ignorance and dulness, which seem to augment the credibility of the assertion, and which throw an air of truth over that which, if it had stood alone, might have been, as it very often was in similar cases, a pure invention.

The evidence, derivable from an examination of the work itself, of the author's desire to tell the truth, consists in a number of particulars, partly dependent upon the peculiarities of the autograph, partly belonging to the work itself. To the former class I would assign the numerous corrections, erasures, interlineations, and other additions, and even blanks, as being all distinct proofs of an anxiety on the part of the compiler to render his work as perfect and accurate as possible. To the latter belongs his choice of authorities, which, if it had been bad, would hardly have established more against him than a want of judgment, but being very good, proves his carefulness, and his power of weighing evidence and selecting witnesses.

His relation to motives of falsehood it is not easy to discover. He seldom expresses any opinion of his own, and our means of ascertaining his likes and dislikes are consequently very scanty. But taking such evidence as he has left us, he appears to have been a very good hater and tolerably impartial in the distribution of blame. Pope, king, and commonalty all come in for a rating, the latter especially for some of his strongest language. If Urban V. fails in obtaining from the English parliament payment of the arrears of Peter's Pence, our monk celebrates the defeat of a pope by an: "unde scribitur. 'Multa petenti pauca debentur.'" If Edward III. succeeds in getting from the same body a renewal of the grant of the toll on exported wools he comes down upon a king with a: "Sed, ut scribitur, 'Quanto plus habet tanto plus auget, quanto 'ditior tanto cupidior.'" Does he condemn the extravagance of his contemporaries in dress, they are "Fatui," "nebulones," "citherones," "histriones," "mimi," "in aula leones, in campis lepores"; their long-toed boots, “ungula dæmonum,” their short gowns “aperta derisio.” And, worst of all, the unfortunate monk of Chester, who has roused his ire by contradicting William of Malmesbury, is a “madidus monachus,” a dreamer, and a despiser of “the wisdom of our ancestors.” His admiration, infrequently as he expresses it, is equally warm. Clement VI. is “vir bonus, affabilis, jocundus, facetus, morigeratus, sine pari literatus.” Louis of Hungary, “parem in toto mundo bonitatis non habet.” It is to be regretted that the narrative of his own time is not more full, for there can be no question that with the liveliness of feeling that these few extracts indicate, he would have given an animated picture of the habits and events of the latter part of the fourteenth century. What he has given us makes us regret that he did not take the trouble to give us more.

As to his power of acquiring information, the evidence of his position is much more copious and of higher value than any which we have hitherto been discussing. As it has been fully investigated in the Preface to the First Volume, a repetition of the result arrived at is only necessary here; and it will be assumed as established that he was a monk of the abbey of Malmesbury. The importance of his position as the chosen annalist of such a monastery at such a period can hardly be overrated. The abbot of Malmesbury was one of the twenty-five parliamentary abbots retained by Edward III., and his name appears upon the Close Rolls in writs of summons several times between A.D. 1350 and A.D. 1366. On each occasion of his appearance in obedience to the writ he would doubtless obtain in addition to his acquaintance with the business of the parliament, much valuable information in regard to important political events, which, we may fairly suppose, would be communicated to the Chronicler of the abbey, who would thus be placed in a very favourable position with regard to the important events of the latter part of his work, with which he has been already shown to have been contemporary. Whether he was even an original witness of any fact narrated by him does not appear from his own avowal, and no other evidence that he was is extant. It has been established, however, that he occasionally employs contemporary report, and in two instances he himself states that his accounts were derived from the narratives of eye-witnesses, in one instance directly, in the other indirectly. In another most important instance, the very curious Itinerary of the Black Prince in the Campaign of Poitiers, it is clear from internal evidence that he has availed himself of the testimony—probably the written testimony—of a person accompanying the English army; who that person was is not at present known. It is moreover tolerably certain that he noted down the events of the latter years of his chronicle while they must have been quite fresh in his memory.

With regard to his character as a transcriber and compiler, there is, I fear, but little to be said in his favour.

With few exceptions, which are fortunately in the more important parts of the work, the transcription, condensation, and combination of authorities are done in a slovenly manner, but if judged by reference to similar works of about the same period, not perhaps in a more slovenly manner than the average of monastic annalists, but certainly more inaccurately than the portions, for example, of the contemporary Polichronicon copied from other writers. I should be glad, for his own sake, to be able to attribute the errors which deface the pages of his autograph to monastic fidelity in following the MSS. employed by him; but this is almost impossible, for the probability is extremely small that all the MSS. to which he had access, and which represent works of the most varied dates and characters, from S. Isidorus of Seville to Ralph Higden of Chester, should be everywhere corrupted by similar inaccuracies. To explain such a community of error, we must either assume that they were all the work of one scribe, or, if of many, then all making similar blunders. Of these suppositions, the most probable is the first, and this is extremely unlikely, for even if all the MSS. employed belonged to one monastery, it is very unlikely that they should have been the work of one hand, for many scribes were engaged at one time, and the same monastic library of course contained MSS. of many different dates. If every allowance be made for the probable inaccuracies of the MSS., from which our author copied or compiled, there is still a considerable surplus of mistakes, of a limited number of kinds, which it is very difficult to escape assigning to his own carelessness or ignorance. There is a doubt, however, of which the benefit may justly be allowed him, and that arises from the rarity of autographs and our consequent ignorance of the extent to which the scribes of "fair copies" may have corrected the errors of transcription in the first draughts of other mediæval works. So far as autographs have been examined, their evidence would certainly seem to show that our author's slovenliness was no such unusual phenomenon; and in his own case it is clear that in some one of the original transcripts a large proportion of his errors had actually been rectified. Be this as it may, however, when we investigate his character as an original writer, there is nothing for him but praise. His brief notices of events are clear and concise, and so far as they can be independently verified accurate in every particular; his accounts of remarkable natural phenomena, a taste for recording which he seems to have possessed in a degree exceeding his fellow annalists, are very curious and minute, and show a considerable power of description and illustration. The absence of miraculous stories from the original portion of the work is also remarkable, but not peculiar to our author, and tends to confirm what has been said in a previous portion of this Preface, that the miracles recorded by monastic writers were generally removed either from the locality or the epoch of the writers. On the whole, combining the evidence which we have collected of his veracity, position, and impartiality, it will be safe to assume that the notices peculiar to the Chronicle are to be received as correct, and that his unsupported assertions, in the absence of contradictory testimony, may be fully credited, in spite of the manifest inaccuracies which diminish the trustworthiness of the earlier portions of this work. The value of the facts testified to opens another question, and one it appears to me which is incapable of a satisfactory reply. The value of anything whatever, from a coin to a musical note is relative, and depends entirely upon the standard by which it is measured. This standard, in the case of a work like the present, is manifestly quite arbitrary, and varies with the object of every new reader. The Eulogium contains nothing more than the information of a monastic annalist, of average intelligence, in a good position, and probably in close relation with those who were au fait of current events. It must be remembered that the writer is not a historian, but an annalist, a collector of historical materials; a hodman, and not an architect; and it is as a hodman, and not as an architect, that he must be judged. He is a hodman of great industry, if not of the highest abilities, and his "tale of bricks" is of full measure.

Independently, however, of the direct value of the Chronicle as a narrative undoubtedly contemporary of the period A.D. 1350—A.D. 1366, the earlier portion of the work has an indirect value of its own, which must not be overlooked. It is a monument of opinion; and among materials for the history of a period the beliefs of that period are some of the most important. If it were nothing more it would be interesting (and often amusing) to learn the historical, geographical, physical, and metaphysical creed of an age as influential as the Fourteenth Century; and that creed is fully and fairly represented by the first four books of the Eulogium. But such knowledge is something more than interesting, it is important and necessary in the highest degree.

With regard, finally, to the credibility and value of the Continuation, we are reduced to the evidence derivable from the work itself, nothing whatever being known of the character or position of its author. Comparing it with the printed chronicles of the same period, its statements are in the main confirmed by them. Here and there, as in all similar works, we find confusion and error; but the mistakes are certainly rather below than above the average. The account of the proceedings of parliament in the reign of Richard II., a most important part of the narrative, is very full, and, compared with the records on the Parliament Rolls themselves, appears to be remarkable for minuteness and accuracy. This, of course, implies the employment of trustworthy sources of information. The language is good, free from grammatical errors, and offers no difficulties of construction like those which occasionally present themselves in the Chronicle to which it is a supplement; from which it may be fairly concluded that the author was a person of greater cultivation than the compiler of the Eulogium.

The notices peculiar to the Chronicle, such as the account of the proceedings of Courtenay, bishop of London, on the bull of Gregory XI. against the Florentines, that of the Great Council summoned by Edward III. in consequence of a demand of the same pope for aid, that of the proceedings at Oxford on another bull of the same pope against Wickliffe, the account of the discovery of the plot of the earl of Huntingdon and others against Henry IV., of the proceedings against the Minorites in the reign of that king, and other less important particulars, are certainly of great interest and value. There is nothing in them which would, à priori, indicate untrustworthiness, except, perhaps, the minuteness of the details; and this, in the absence of evidence of falsehood in those parts of the Chronicle verifiable by comparison with other sources, may be held to prove access to the testimony of original witnesses. It is of necessity evidence either of falsehood or of autopticity; and, as of the former there is no additional proof, we are justified, until such proof be presented, in receiving the accounts as true, and if true, then as the testimony, mediately or immediately given, of those whose position must have been that of eye-witnesses.

The personality of the writer is completely disguised. He expresses few opinions which would indicate his leanings; and if he had expressed more, we should be embarrassed by the difficulty commonly encountered in dealing with the work of a mediæval annalist whose name and position are unknown, and whose autograph is lost or undiscoverable, viz.: that of deciding if the opinions expressed are his own or merely those of the author whom he is following for the time being, and which might bear any conceivable relation to his own views, from perfect coincidence to absolute contradiction.

In conclusion, I readily admit that the author or authors of the Eulogium and its Continuation have recorded much that is not new, much also which, in the present state of historical literature, will appear to many readers trivial and unimportant. But these disadvantages, if disadvantages they are to be called, are inseparable both from the uniform practice of annalists of the middle ages, and from the plan of these publications, which leaves no option to an editor of omitting what he himself may deem of little value. I am, however, decidedly of opinion that there is an amount of original historical information contained in the Chronicle which very far outweighs the trivialities, the repetitions, and the mistakes which deface it.

Moreover, although it is no part of my duty as editor to defend works of this nature, assuming that they need defence, or to rescue them from the charge of dulness, but rather to present the text of my author to my readers, leaving it to them to decide the question of his value in relation to their own researches, I must be allowed to express my conviction that mediæval annalists, as a class, are quite as trustworthy as modern historians of acknowledged credit. They enjoyed no peculiar immunity from the tendency to error common to all men; and it is, perhaps, very fortunate for their accuracy that their ambition soared no higher than to a bare unpolished narrative of facts, and that, with the scanty philosophy of their age, they did not attempt to theorise. We have reason to be grateful that they were content to reproduce that which they saw and heard, so far as human fallibility would allow, exactly as they saw and heard it, and not as they desired to see it or to hear it, or wished that they had seen it or heard it. Their function was to preserve, not to interpret or even to classify, the facts with which they dealt.

With reference to the plan of the Index, I have aimed at making it, especially for the earlier and less directly valuable portion of the Eulogium, an index of subjects rather than an index of names and places. For the portion of the Chronicle having reference to English history, I have given fuller entries. No person can be more painfully conscious than I am of the many imperfections of that part of the work for which I am responsible, namely, the foot-notes, prefaces, and Index; but I trust that I have erred rather on the side of too great detail than in the opposite direction. At least I hope that the volumes are not unworthy of the Government for which they have been undertaken.

Ordgarus dux hæredem non habuit corporalem nisi filiam illam, Estrildam nomine. Rex sibi favens petitionem concessit. Ethelwoldus¹ autem Cornubiæ rediens omnia a rege concessa duci ostendit. De cætero nuptiæ parantur, magnates et proceres convocantur, sacramentalia celebrantur. Interea domina gravida facta est et infantulus pulcherrimus in mundo procreatus.

Emensis paucis annis rex pulchritudinem Estrildæ audiens, clavo clavum expellens, fraude fraudem eludens, frontem serenam comiti² Ethelwaldo³ ostendit. Edgarus rex Adelwaldi monitis plures novellas plantationes in Anglia instituit. Abbatiam de Abindonia, et de Burgo, et de Rameseie et Torneie et mediis paludibus amœnissimo loco fixit. Est autem palus illa latissima et visu decora, multis lacubus et pernis depicta, insulis et silvis florida, intra quam sunt multæ ecclesiæ, scilicet, Rameseie, de Cathelich, Thornegræ, Crolandæ, Burgi, et Spaldynge, ecclesiam etiam Iuonis et ecclesiam Sancti Ægidii de Crecham et Sanctæ Trinitatis in Theoford. Hic rex Edgarus regem Scottorum et regem Insularum et alios v. subregulos ad curiam coactos per fluvium Dæ in Wallia apud Cestriam in pompam et triumphum una navi impositos, ipse proram sedens remigare cogebat. Tempore Edgari regis beatissimus Dunstanus Cantuariensem suscepit archiepiscopatum. Huic mos erat quando Cantuariæ morabatur loca sancta noctu peragraré et se ibi per contritionem cordis mactare. Quadam igitur vice ad monasterium Sanctorum Apostolorum Petri et Pauli, ubi beatus Augustinus et alii nonnulli pluresque tumulati sunt, circa mediæ noctis silentia perrexit, ibique diu oravit; egressusque ad oratorium Beatæ Mariæ, quod ad Orientem ipsius monasterii situm erat, divertit, in quo audivit voces psallentium et dicentium: Gaudent in cælo animæ sanctorum qui Christi vestigia sunt secuti, et quia pro ejus amore sanguinem suum fuderunt,² ideo cum Christo regnabunt in æternum.

Huic successit filius ejus Ricardus Primus⁴ cognominatus Sine Metu, eo quod nunquam timuit. Hujus consuetudo fuit quod ubicumque juxta ecclesiam vel cœmeterium transiret descenderet et oraret; si ecclesiam intrare non posset ad ostium ecclesiæ orationem faceret. Quadam autem nocte iter faciens, juxta consuetudinem, cum ad ecclesiam unam devenisset, vidit eam apertam et intravit; invenit ibi corpus humanum mortuum jacens in feretro absque custodia; cum autem usque ad cancellum gladio accinctus transisset, cirothecas⁵ e manibus extraxit et juxta se posuit ac devote oravit; cumque orationem complisset audivit post tergum suum sonitum magnum, feretrum concuti et moveri; qui respiciens vidit mortuum erectum et aperto ore contra ipsum brachia extendentem. At ille nil metuens signum Sanctæ Crucis sibi imposuit et adjuravit eum in nomine Domini ut requiesceret; quod cum non faceret, dux indignatus pertransiit, et abstracto gladio corpus per medium abscidit, et in duas partes divisit, ita ut hinc inde ex utroque latere feretri divisum caderet, statimque exiens ad suos venit; cumque cirothecas in cancello oblitus esset securus rediit easque recepit, et iter inceptum peregit; qui demum per totam terram suam generale fecit edictum ne alius deinceps mortuus absque vigilia et custodia relinqueretur donec sepulturæ traderetur; unde postea mos inolevit ut super mortuos custodiæ et vigiliæ⁶ haberentur donec sepulturæ traderentur. Death of Henry II.
6 July.

Tempore Henrici III. orta est magna guerra inter Christianos et Paganos ab causam unius traditoris comes¹ de Triple, qui reginam de Ierusalem voluit in uxorem habuisse. Ipsa vero omnino recusans ad propriam voluntatem se maritavit homini robusto, valido, generoso, omni virtute decorato, licet simplici prole procreato. Memoratus comes videns se a regina recusari, Saladino soldano adivit et foedus secum iniit, et Christianitatem omnino abjuravit.

Die² vero belli constituto de exercitu memorati comitis Christiani fideliter sperantes tempore congressus praedictus comes contra Christianos cum exercitu suo faciem suam tyrannidem divertit; unde subsequuta est magna strages Christianorum. In illo enim bello occisi Templarii et Hospitalarii sunt et omnes totius Christianitatis nobiliores, et Sancta Civitas Ierusalem capta et Sancta Crux in Babiloniam deducta.³ Ferunt quidam quod ille maledictus comes die quindecima post bellum commissum sanguinem vomendo miserrime expiravit. Non enim praetereundem est de uno miraculo quod accidebat in partibus transmarinis in civitate Rocham Amatoris tempore regis Henrici Tertii.

postea fuit rex Alemanniæ, necnon et filias quamplures. Hic in anno Domini MCCII. apud Castrum Burabel cepit Arturum nepotem suum filium Gaufridum comitis Britanniae Minoris, cui hæreditas Angliæ competebat, in festo Advincula Sancti Petri, et cum eo multos inimicos Pictavienses qui ibi erant, eosque arctæ custodiæ mancipavit. Arturum vero occidit, et sororem suam Alienoram in castro Bristolli perpetuo carceri mancipavit. Divulgata postmodum morte Arturi Philippus rex Franciæ, anno Domini MCCIII., totam Normanniam et comitatum Britanniae una cum comitatibus Andegaviæ, Pictaviæ, et Cenomanniæ, suæ ditioni subiecit.

Anno Domini MCCXIII. orta est dissensio inter ipsum regem et suos barones, unde multi nobilium Angliæ quibus præfuerunt Galfridus de Maundevile, Robertus filius Walteri, Willielmus Marescallus junior, indignati quod rex injuriose eos opprimeret et libertates suas violenter auferret, invicem confœderati insurgere ceperunt contra regem, et civitatem London de consensu civium fere per triennium contra eum tenuerunt.

Iste Johannes rex Angliæ homo crudelis et immisericors fuit. Tempore istius Johannis floruit Petrus de Ponte-Fracto¹ cui vero (?) apud Eborum, et etiam ad Pontem-Fractum apparuit Christus ad missam in manibus sacerdotis in forma pueri speciosissimi, respexitque in eum et insuffavit et ait; Pax, Pax, Pax, multa quæ ventura erant prædixit ei, dixitque: Dic summis pontificibus et omnibus ad quos venire poteris ut se cautius custodiant, et sollicitius instruant populum vitare peccata et agere bona opera, alioquin in proximo veniet Divina ultio super eos, quia in multis milibus hominum non inveniuntur tres Christianam professionem dignis operibus imitantes. Item vox cœlestis facta est ad prædictum Petrum et in multis instruxit eum. Item raptus est corpore permanente tribus diebus et tribus noctibus, quo tempore ostensa sunt ei in cœlestibus et in infernalibus gaudia beatorum et tormenta malorum; ibi plenius instructus est quid docere et facere debuisset et jussu non omittere. Incepatus² est etiam quod aliquantulum tardasset, unde et pœnitentia injuncta est ei XXXIII. annis abstinere a carnibus et vinis, quam districte tenuit; quoad vixit Verbum Dei indesinenter importuneque prædicavit quibuscumque potuit cum summa auctoritate et prædicare jubebat. Item Johanni regi Angliæ XII. annis ante passionem suam dicebat quod ei Divina dignatio ad regendum regnum Angliæ XIII. annos concessit; sed quia idem rex tribus annis plus regnavit adversus virum Sanctum iratus quasi falsum dixisset, et quod falsum prophetavit et quam-

Has literas prenotatas rex Edwardus misit diversis abbatibus in Anglia inter quos misit tenorem sequentem :

Vobis omnibus⁴ mandamus quod has literas in cronis vestris ad perpetuam rei gestæ memoriam faciatis annotari. Teste magistro Willielmo⁵ de la Marche thesaurario nostro apud Westmonasterium. Nono die Julii, anno regni nostri XIX.

Anno Domini MCCXCII. rex Angliæ post festum Sancti Johannis Baptiste in Scociam veniens, receptis eorum allegationibus qui regnum Scociæ sibi vendicabant pro jure suo, eligi fecit XL. personas, videlicet XX. de Anglia et XX. de Scocia, qui istas allegationes deliberata diligentia discuterent sententiam finalem, usque in festo⁶ Sancti Michaelis proximo veniente⁷ differens proferendam. Adveniente autem prædicto festo post diligentem negotii discussionem de assensu omnium XL. Johanni de Balliolo, qui de filia David regis descenderat seniore, regnum Scociæ ex integro adjudicatur; exclusis cæteris qui duabus⁸ aliis sororibus descenderant.

Johannes⁹ vero in festo¹⁰ Sancti Andreæ sequenti in Scocia in abbacia de la Skoune¹¹ canonicorum regularium¹² super lapidem regalem collocatus de assensu et voluntate regis et aliorum procerum solemniter¹³ coronatur. Post vero coronationem accedens ad regem

³ This entry concludes the first page of the MS. The character in which it is written coincides exactly with that of the Eulogium. That of the entries in the succeeding pages of the Kalendar is smaller, but obviously by the same hand. It is almost impossible by any reasonable amount of mere description, unaided by the evidence of a fac simile, to make clear to a reader the differences between the shades of the ink and the minute variations of character in which the interpolations in this Kalendar have been made by the author, though they would appear to the least practised eye to have been entered at many different times in different batches. No more, therefore, has been done in the foot notes than to distinguish the first entries of the Kalendar from the subsequent additions; all attempt at classifying with any precision in contemporaneous masses the interpolations which were made from time to time by the author, having been laid aside, as of necessity leading to a prolixity of description not at all commensurate with the result attained.

Hoc anno fuit in Anglia magna pestilentia quam A.D. 1390. "Quintam Pestilentiam" vocabant.

Anno Domini 1391^o nihil hic scribitur, quia regnum A.D. 1391. Angliæ fuit in malo statu.

Anno Domini M^oCCC^o. nonagesimo secundo Rex splendide pavit¹ capitulum Fratrum Minorum apud Sarum, et comedit cum eis ibidem in refectorio, habens secum Reginam Annam, episcopos et alios dominos in festo Assumptionis Beatæ Mariæ et ibidem utebatur regalibus et corona. Quid autem actum est in regno annis Domini 1393^o et 1394^o hic non scribitur propter varietatem regni Angliæ.

Anno Domini 1395^o, dux Lancastriæ de mandato Regis transivit² in Franciam et tractavit de pace cum Rege Franciæ Ambianis; et rex fecit omnes expensas et dedit sibi et cuilibet de sua familia magna donaria.

Anno Domini 1396^o, factum est parliamentum Londoniis, ad quod rediens dux Lancastriæ formam pacis in tractatu habitam expressit; videlicet, quod Rex Ricardus Angliæ arma Franciæ, Calesiam et omnia conquesta per Edwardum dimitteret, et omnia quæ Edwardi erant ante vendicationem³ regni Franciæ cum residuo redemptionis Johannis Regis Franciæ consideret. Et dixit quod arma Franciæ portare non prodest et Calesia plus nocet regno Angliæ in expensis quam prodest; sed dux Gloucestriæ, comites Arundell et Warwici omnino⁴ contradixerunt.

In hoc parlamento dux Lancastriæ petiit quod filius suus Henricus judicaretur hæres regni Angliæ; cui contradixit comes Marchiæ asserens se descendisse a domino Leonello, secundo filio Edwardi Regis. Econtrario dux dicebat quod Rex Henricus Tertius habuit duos [filios], Edmundum seniore et primogenitum, et Edwardum.

Qui tamen Edmundus dorsum habuit fractum, et propter hoc iudicavit seipsum indignum esse ad coronam; quare pater eorum eos sic componere fecit, quod Edwardus regnaret, et post eum hæredes Edmundi, et dedit Edmundo comitatum Lancastriæ; et ab eo descendit Henricus filius ejus jure matris, quæ fuit filia dicti Edmundi. Cui respondit comes, dicens, hoc non esse verum, "sed Edwardus fuit primogenitus, et Edmundus vir elegantissimus¹ et nobilis miles, prout in chronicis patenter "continetur." Rex autem imposuit eis silentium.

A.D. 1390. Item, in hoc parlamento dux Lancastriæ petiit Regem dare sibi ducatum Aquitanniæ, sub certa annua pensione, et ipse pro posse totum acquireret, sicut et² rex Franciæ dedit illum cuidam militi, sub eadem conditione. Sed dux Gloucestriæ, comites Arundell' et Warwic', omnino contradixerunt, dicentes, pertinentia ad coronam esse satis pauca. Rex tamen concessit.

A.D. 1394. Hoc anno, Hibernici veri Anglici auxilium contra puros Hibernicos petierunt. Quibus Rex dixit se velle Hiberniam adire, et ideo exegit decimam cleri et quintamdecimam laicorum ut in parlamento solebat, statuens quod omnes nativi de Hibernia in Hiberniam remearent,³ dicens paucos Hibernicos esse ibidem, quare dicti puri Hibernici prævalent ibidem. Dotati vero Hibernici in Anglia et ecclesiastici promoti dato auro ab hoc statuto sunt exempti. Et rex cum exercitu transivit in Hiberniam, ubi, agente quodam fratre de Ordine Prædicatorum, fuit ipse in periculo adversariorum. Sed frater captus, missus est ad Turrin London'; qui postea ad preces provincialis carceri sui ordinis est liberatus.

Hoc autem anno dux Lancastriæ transivit in Aquitanniam, ut ducatum sibi acquireret; sed Burdegalia et aliæ civitates, ipsum excluserunt, dicentes, quod a

Rex cepit consilium, et unus qui nunquam dilexit ecclesiam, miles ejus, dixit: "Nunquam extinguemus clamorem istum de vita Ricardi nisi fratres extinguantur." Minister fratrum accessit ad Regem, dicens se inhibuisse fratribus omnibus ne aliquid facerent vel loquerentur in præjudicium aut offensam Regis, et gratiam pro eis petiit. Deinde nuntiata fuerunt hæc, ut prædictum est.

Dux Provinciæ, et dominus Balthasar, antipapa, et cardinalis Bononiæ, cum grandi exercitu, contra Regem Neopolitanum ascenderunt.

A.D. 1410. Hoc tempore factum est parliamentum Londoniæ post festum Sancti Hillarii, in quo Rex dixit cistas suas fore vacuas, et se graviter indebitatum, petens decimam et dimidiam a clero, et quintamdecimam et dimidiam laicorum. Duravitque parliamentum usque ad Pascha, et nihil actum est tunc.

Execution of Thomas Badby for heresy. In hoc parlamento combustus fuit hæreticus laicus, qui dicebat quod Corpus Christi non erat in altari, sed panis benedictus tantum. Et cum quareretur ab eo coram Rege et parlamento quid dixisset si fuisset cum Christo in Cæna quando Christus dixit: "Hoc est “ Corpus Meum,” respondit: “ Dixissem quod Ipse dicit A.D. 1409.

 “ falsum.” Et cum insipienter verba ad sui defensionem multiplicaret, visa est quædam aranea horribilis repere super labia sua; quam cum quidam amovere voluisset, dixit archiepiscopus Cantuariensis: “ Sine; “ nunc videbimus quis eum docet loqui.” Qui cum comburi cœpisset, clamavit dicens: “ Miseremini mei;”
 et quæcito potuerunt assolverunt eum, extrahentes ipsum de igne. Et venerunt ad ipsum episcopi cum solemnitate decenti portantes Corpus Christi, et quærebant si crederet ibi esse Corpus Christi. Respondit quod non. Et iterum composuerunt ignem, et ipsum intromiserunt. Clamavitque sicut prius; tamen noluit fateri ibi esse Corpus Christi. Tunc totaliter combustus fuit, et ad ignem sempiternum transivit.

Anno Domini 1410, et regni Henrici 4^{ti} decimo, statim post Annuntiationem venit in Angliam magister Hospi-talariorum generalis, cum turba militum et familia copiosa, missus a papa ad Reges Angliæ et Franciæ, per quem hortatur eos papa ut tractent de pace, et pro-mittit se cum omnibus cardinalibus tractatui interesse.
 Et resumptum fuit parliamentum, in quo Rex exegit decimam et dimidiam decimæ a clero, et quintamdecimam cum dimidia laicorum. Item statutum fuit quod omnes curati manerent in ecclesiis suis hospitilitatem tenentes; quare multi recesserunt de curia Regis, domibus episcoporum et aliorum dominorum, et de mansionibus suis apud Londoniam.
